Man Tells Police Story Not True

Ronald Joe Frazier, 24, of 719A Bennett st., has told city police that his story about being kidnapped, beaten and robbed early New Year's morning was "just a story."

He was confronted at the police station this week by two persons who said they were with him on the night of the pretended kidnapping. Edward Wiley Milam, in the Navy and stationed at Bremerton, Wash., told city police that he read the story of the kidnapping and robbery in last Friday's Mail Tribune.

He told city police that he and a friend, Clarence Edward Wilson, Jacksonville, were with Frazier at the time given for the incident, and told police a story much different than Frazier's.
Milam said that he met Frazier near a bar in Medford, and accepted a ride with him to Jacksonville. When they stopped for a drink in Jacksonville they met Wilson, who, on the request of Frazier, offered to drive both persons home in Frazier's car.

On the way back to Medford the car went out of control and skidded into a ditch. Both Milam and Wilson told police that Frazier pulled a gun on Wilson and the latter was forced to hit Frazier in an effort to get the gun away. Milam then kept the gun, until, as he stated "Frazier had sobered up." They then got the car out of the ditch and went home.

Frazier had come into the city police station Friday and told police that two men had kidnapped and robbed him of $4.50 after wrecking his car in a ditch near Jacksonville. (He gave police no reason for his story.)

Planning Needed To Attract New Industry to State

Williams Dawkins, Medford public relations consultant, told members of the Rotary club Tuesday that adequate planning, joint community promotions and cooperation between communities can clear up misconceptions about Oregon and help attract diversified industries to the state within the next 10 years.

Dawkins said "we should devote as much time and as many dollars to helping home-grown industries develop as to attracting new ones."

Many of the misconceptions about Oregon, Dawkins noted, have been created by Oregonians, who "should avoid underselling the state by the tendency to talk too much about the state's liabilities and two little about its assets."

One of Medford's greatest selling points, he told Rotarians, is its record in work which shows community spirit. The latter is often the deciding factor for an industry seeking new plant locations, he noted.

Community spirit is made up of the area's desire to grow and prosper and to the attention it gives to its schools, churches, cultural and civic activities.
Dawkins said area residents should devote themselves to selling the entire valley for the right type of plant location. He said industry located in Grants Pass or Ashland will help Medford directly or indirectly.

"It's a mistake and waste of time and money to battle with the next door neighbor over industry," he said.
