Bernard H. — I want to patch things up.
Grace C. — We'd look like fools.

Bernard H. — I am a bachelor of 28. Nearly a year ago I was engaged to marry a wonderful girl, but the engagement was broken off because of a silly argument.

It started because I couldn't give up a college reunion for a family wedding Grace wanted me to attend. We got into a bitter argument. Grace said that if I was going to act that way after we were married she just couldn't take it. I said friends come before family and she gave me back the ring.

I still think I was right, but I am beginning to realize I have given up the one girl in the world I can love. I am trying to patch things up, but Grace believes it's too late.

Grace C. — I think we'd look like fools if we ever got engaged again after all the trouble we caused our family and friends. We had our wedding plans set and received many gifts which had to be returned.

My family and friends feel that I was right and that it was Bernard's obligation to come to the wedding since he was already almost a member of the family. At least if he would admit he was wrong I would be more willing to take up where we left off.

However, I must admit I'm tempted to patch things up because I have never cared for anyone as much as Bernard. I have been miserable since our breakup.

The Council: When wedding plans are called off at the last minute moment because of some "silly" argument between the engaged couple, there is always more at stake than the argument itself. Few differences are so serious and insurmountable that people can't smooth them over when they want to. In any case, by the time the couple has come to the point of making wedding plans, the most serious differences have usually been resolved in some way.

Grace and Bernard should face the fact their argument was the excuse for a breakup which must have been desired by both of them. If their relationship was the all-important thing it should have been, neither Grace nor Bernard would have found it too difficult to sympathize with the other's point of view. It would not have been hard to give in.

The basic cause for such an upset can rest with some deep-seated incompatibility. However, since Grace and Bernard are contemplating renewing their engagement, this is most unlikely. The most probable explanation is cold feet. Neither Grace nor Bernard felt quite ready for matrimony.

Are they ready now simply because they have been miserable apart? We doubt it. The aftermath of a broken engagement is beset with unpleasantness. Each of the partners is bound to think wistfully of the sense of security and good times they experienced together. But Grace's fear of being thought a fool, her rather childish concern about who is right and Bernard's concern about the same issue don't point in the direction of a successful reconciliation. If and when they are both ready for such an event, they will know and admit they have acted like fools in relation to one another.

Farmer Breaks Leg In Romp With Pal

St. Catharines, Ont. — Farmer Henry Townsend landed in the hospital with a broken leg after a romp with Wellington, a playful pal.

"The old fellow meant no harm," Townsend said. "All he did was give me an extra friendly nudge with his head. He has no horns, but he weighs a ton."

Wellington is a bull.

Man Pays Old Debt To Clear Conscience

Buffalo, N.Y. — The old man asked a railroad clerk how much a railroad tie cost. The puzzled clerk did some phoning and came up with the answer — $4.52.

The old man put $4.52 on the counter and said: "I stole a railroad tie in 1931. It's been bothering me ever since. Now my conscience is clear."
