Coiners of Phrases Have Borrowed from Nature

There are saying coined to express every phase of human activity; most are pretty expressive and any shortage that may exist is being added to nearly every day. Coiners of phrases seem to work while the rest of us sleep.

Sometimes we classify the sayings as "slang phrases" but many are classic; thinkers, poets and the "man on the street" have searched and often found, a word or two that adequately expresses a world of meaning with a minimum of effort. His friends and their friends immediately adopt it as their own and use it to express their own thoughts.

The number of slogans and phrases that concern animals, birds, fish, etc., indicates that a great deal of "nature-love" entered into the lives of the people who originally coined them.

Watched Actions of birds and animals were watched very closely in hopes that tomorrow's weather or next winter's cold would be revealed, when preparations could be made. Even today in rural America the industrious storing of food by squirrels or the flight of migrating geese is looked upon as a pretty sure indication of an early or long season of cold. The heaviness of fur-bearing animals, is also supposed to be a pretty sure barometer.

"There's going to be a frost tonight" conjures up in the mind, hickory nuts losing their hold and rattling down through the branches; the juice of wild grapes turning sweet under the impact of cold, and the withering of goldenrod and other late fall plants.

And the winter always comes. Days of bleakness and biting wind, while the sun is a faint blur in the cold sky. The farmer looks at the dwindling hay and checks the calendar, "Half the winter, and half the hay"—wonders if it is going to come out all right. Then he has one that is unpopular but invariably true, which pertains to that part of the season after the excitement of the holidays—"when the days begin to lengthen, then the cold begins to strengthen."

"Groundhog Day" on Feb. 2 promises that the "first robin of spring will soon blaze the trail for the bluebird of summer."

The corn should be in the ground "when the oak leaves are the size of squirrels ears" in order to be "knee high by the Fourth of July."

Scientists Work To Discover 'Youth Fountain'

Chicago - (Science Service) - An approach to a pharmaceutical fountain of youth has been achieved by administering androgenic steroid to aged men. A degree of restoration of youthful function, particularly of the muscles, has been observed.

Dr. Gregory Pincus, research director of the Worcester Foundation for Experimental Biology, Shrewsbury, Mass., told the American Association for the Advancement of Science recently that the androgen administration alone does not completely restore youthful function in elderly men but it does help bring back some youthful attributes.

The use of the steroid for the treatment of the aged men is based upon the fact that with advancing age the manufacture in the body of steroids declines.

Not Correctable "There may be irreversible age condition changes that cannot be corrected by the steroid treatment and there may be other hormonal deficits," Dr. Pincus suggested.

"We still have no knowledge of age-related changes in the production of other steroidal hormones such as progesterone and aldosterone. Furthermore, the effects of the steroidal hormones upon other hormone producing systems in the body such as the thyroid gland and the pituitary gland yet remain to be explored in elderly subjects."

Washington - (UPI) - Pan American Airways has proposed a five-point revamping of its service to the Far East which the airline said would allow a 20 per cent reduction in passenger fares.

As if knowing "that one swallow does not make a summer," millions of others join and the "good old summer time" becomes "kneebent with bird songs." "Kneebent in June" is the pleasant predicament that any one could possibly be in, but it doesn't last long, for the "last rose of summer" soon "fades away and dies" and the "brown sear of leaves of autumn" rattle ominously in the "cold north wind."

Squirrels hurry to "fay in" the last of the oak and hickory tree harvest; "wise birds" are taking off in waves for the hospitable warmth of the Deep South.

A sharp wind with a knife-edge of cold snatches away the "last leaf from the tree." Wood smoke, little darker than the leaden sky, puffs up from chimneys. Householders look out and observe "there's going to be a killing frost tonight."

Let's leave it there; it is where we came in anyway. (Released by The Register and Tribune Syndicate, 1960)
