Mt. Hood Roads Closed by Snow

Salem – (UPI) – The state highway department has announced that snow has closed the McKenzie pass and Mt. Hood loop highways for the winter.

The department said that this was the latest in 19 seasons that the two routes have been able to remain open. Also closed by Friday's storm is the little-used Sun Mountain road in the Klamath area.

HOW A WIFE HELPED HER ALCOHOLIC HUSBAND

DR. ALVAREZ

Every so often a wife asks me what on earth she can do to help her husband, who is drinking himself to death. She says he doesn't seem to realize what he is doing to himself, his career, and his children; he just won't admit that he is an alcoholic; and he has become so extremely sensitive to the slightest word of criticism that, if anything is said, he promptly flies off the handle. Recently, I read James L. Free's remarkable book, called "Just One More," concerning the problem drinker, (Coward - McCann, N.Y., 1955). He says that usually there is nothing that a wife can do to help her husband while he is slipping down hill into alcoholism and ruin. But eventually, there may come a time when, as in his own case, the wife can start him back on the road to recovery. As he says, there was only one way in which it could have been done, and she had the wisdom to take that way.

One noon, as he was getting over an awful hangover, she very quietly, and without allowing the slightest criticism to come into her voice or even into her eyes, told her husband exactly what he had done the afternoon and evening before. She just described the events dispassionately, as a newspaper reporter might have done. She told him how he had come home three hours late for an important business appointment. The man was still there waiting for him. She described how her husband had skidded the car off of the driveway into a tree, and then into a box hedge. She described his falling into the hedge and being helped out by the visitor who, obviously, was puzzled. She described how her husband had roughly repelled his friend's help, and told him to keep his blankety-blankety hands off of him. She told of the abusive talk he had used to her, to his son and to the visitor. At the dinner table, he got sick, passed out, and had to be put to bed. Most of this was news to Free, because he had so largely blacked out that he had almost no memory of what had happened. For the first time he saw the picture of his behavior in all its ugly detail. He saw himself as he would have seen some other man who had made a pig and a spectacle of himself.

Humble and Afraid

With this, Free surrendered. He knew then that liquor had him licked; at last he was humble; he was afraid, and he wanted help. As he said, if he hadn't come to this extremely important moment of surrender, he would have gone on to end up either in a mental hospital or skid row, or in his grave.

At last he saw what all alcoholics eventually must come to see, which is that he was the sort of man who cannot take one drink and then quit. Because of this, if he was ever to stay sober, he would have to quite entirely, and never touch the stuff again. That would be his only salvation.

In his book, Free discusses ably all the various ways in which an alcoholic can try to get on the wagon and stay there — as through Alcoholics Anonymous, Alcoholic Information Centers, a stay in a mental hospital, treatment by physicians, or by psychiatrists, or by clergymen, lay therapists or an out-patient clinic.

What Is The Law?

This column is prepared as a public service by the College of Law, Willamette University, Salem, to explain basic legal principles, not to provide legal advice. The reader is cautioned not to apply these cases to his own problems without an attorney's advice, for differing facts may change the outcome.

A Will Can Be Revoked By Destroying It

Ted, a widower, executed a will giving half of his property to his invalid sister, Anne, and the other half of his property to his only child, George. Ted took an executed copy of the will home with him. He died several months later.

The copy of the will retained by Ted could not be found among his effects. Although the contents of Ted's will could be proved by using the copy that his lawyer retained, the court gave all of his property to George. Anne was denied the right to share in the estate even though it is quite possible that Ted still wanted her to have one-half of his property at his death.

Power to Revoke

Anyone making a will has the power to revoke it by destroying or mutilating any executed copy of the document. It is presumed that a person has revoked his will by physical destruction if an executed copy was known to be in his possession before his death and cannot be found after his death. Therefore, unless Anne can prove that Ted did not destroy his will, it is presumed that he did and the property all goes to his son under the laws of inheritance. The outcome of this case indicates the importance of proper custody of wills.

Probably the most satisfactory way to revoke a will is by the execution of a new document. The document need not be a will but it must be executed with the formalities required for a will and must indicate that the person executing the document intends to have it operate as a revoking instrumentality.

In addition to the means available to a person for revoking his will, the law provides that a will is automatically revoked if certain events occur. For instance, Oregon statutes provide that a will is revoked by the marriage or divorce of the person making the will. Therefore, soldiers and others who executed wills while young and have since married are without a will, in effect, and their wives will take her ordinary share under the laws governing distribution of estates when no will exists.

Wife Must Share

If there are no children, the wife will get all of the husband's property, and if there are children she must share the property with them. If a newly-wed wants to provide for his mother or father, he has to execute a will after his marriage. Divorce, of course, will not only revoke the will of both parties to the marriage, but will also eliminate the possibility of inheritance as between the parties to the divorce unless a subsequent will is executed.

Committee Hears Union Complaints

Salem – (UPI) – The Legislative Interim Committee on Labor-Management Relations has launched a hearing here involving the use of non-union workmen by employers engaged in a labor-management dispute.

The hearing room was packed with people and the crowd overflowed into the halls.

The first witness was George Brown, political education director of the Oregon AFL-CIO.

"We will submit to you," he said, "that professional strike-breakers are now in use in the Portland newspaper strike."

Brown said it was the feeling of labor officials that an employer should not be permitted to "bring in strike-breakers from out of the state."

At the same time, Brown said, Labor "realized the right of an employer to continue operations during a strike if possible, but not with the use of persons hired specifically for the breaking of a strike."

He declared that the use of strike - breakers "can only lead to a break-down in negotiations."

Committee Reports Classroom Needs

Salem – (UPI) – The Legislative Interim Committee on Education has been told that 583 classrooms are scheduled for completion in Oregon during the 1959-60 school year, but 742 additional classroom will be needed by next September.

D. D. Williams, director of schoolhouse planning for the state department of education, said the additional classrooms are needed for more students who are anticipated, to replace unsatisfactory facilities and to reduce excessive classroom loads.
