

Biggest Call for Teacher Grads Received at OSC

Corvallis - Biggest call for teacher graduates in history was received last year by the Oregon State college school of education with the demand exceeding the supply in almost all fields.

A report prepared by Mrs. Kathryn Smith, director of the teacher placement office, shows 283 June graduates were placed in their first teaching positions and 230 graduates of past years were placed in new and better teaching jobs, some in administrative posts.

Beginning salaries averaged between $4,100 and $4,600, with $5,772 as the top starting figure.

Nearly 200 school administrators from Oregon, California, Washington, Alaska and Hawaii came to the campus for interviews with teacher candidates. Mrs. Smith reported. More than 7,000 teacher vacancies were listed during the year with the teacher placement office. The majority were for elementary teaching positions. The number of requests for college teachers was up over previous years.

Demand for Teachers

Most calls at OSC from high schools were for teachers of home economics, girls physical education, mathematics, science, industrial arts and business subjects. A great many calls were received also, Mrs. Smith noted, for graduates prepared to do special-type teaching, such as speech correction work, remedial reading, or working with retarded children. Foreign language teachers also are in short supply. Elementary schools are seeking more young men teachers.

About three-fourths of the OSC graduates are staying in Oregon to teach but opportunities in other states attracted a big group of teachers again this year. The OSC placement office also helped graduates get teaching jobs in Alaska, France, Guam, Hawaii, Canada and England. Some of these were wives of servicemen stationed overseas.

High Elevation Factor for Clover

Washington (Science Service) - High elevation appears to be an important factor in getting white clover to bloom in the tropics.

It is the low night temperature associated with higher elevations that seems to enable this "foreign" temperate zone plant to grow and flourish, according to E. J. Britten of the Hawaii Agricultural Experiment Station.

A set of experiments, reported in the Journal Science, showed white clover (Trifolium repens) that flowered under natural conditions failed to flower if subjected to cool days and warm nights. Furthermore, plants that did not flower in Hawaiian areas from which they originated did flower under warm day-cool night conditions.

There is some diversity in the clover's adaptation to life in the tropics, the researcher said. Some groups or clones flowered freely without exposure to cold nights. This seems to indicate that flowering is an apparent or phenotypic response of the genotype to its environment.
