The Medical Roundup

Lack of Acid in the Stomach

People write in, much frightened because a doctor has found little or no hydrochloric acid in their stomach. Some now are taking dilute acid, while others are taking pills which form acid in the stomach. Some are taking vitamins with the hope of getting the acid back. Many years ago I lost interest in treating a lack of hydrochloric acid in the stomach because I found that nearly all the people with this lack have as good digestion as anyone else. Also, I found that after examining hundreds of apparently healthy people over 50, that one in four had no hydrochloric acid. The impression I gained was that, as we grow old, some of us lose our stomach acid just as some of us lose the hair on the top of our head. I can see no sense in giving acid to these acid-less people, except in the very rare case in which the person suffers from a diarrhea that can be relieved by the taking of acid. Those persons who are taking dilute acid must rinse their mouth afterwards with water; otherwise they will lose the enamel on the back surface of their front teeth.

Uveitis of the Eyes

Uveitis is an inflammation of one of the important tissues that make up the eyeball. It is often a serious disease which can cause much loss of vision. It accounts for 10 per cent of blindness in this country. It often looks like an inflammation, but for many years the best eye specialists have had only a vague idea as to what

Ice Floe Charlie Men Not To Be Left in Peril

Fairbanks, Alaska—UP—The Air Force Thursday was considering the immediate withdrawal of the 16 men remaining on ice station Charlie in the Arctic Ocean because of new fissures in the floe only 500 feet from the camp occupied by the men.

Brig. Gen. Gordon H. Austin, commander of the 11th air division at Ladd Air Force Base here, said that the Air Force has "no intention" of leaving the men in peril in order to remove the scientific equipment which remains on the floe.

To Inspect Floe Austin and Capt. James F. Smith, an expert on ice island breakups, were to inspect the ice floe early today and with Capt. Arthur Schroeder, head of the operation on Charlie, would decide whether to withdraw the men immediately.

Withdrawal of men and equipment from Charlie began a week ago when the ice station began disintegrating. The Air Force had hoped to remove the scientific equipment from the floe, located 450 miles north of Point Barrow, Alaska, before it broke up completely.

Austin and Smith flew to Charlie when the new fissure was reported and were scheduled to return here at about 8 a.m. p.s.t. with word on whether immediate withdrawal was necessary.

The ice floe has been reduced in size to a mile by a mile and a quarter. This is less than one fifth the size it was when the disintegration, caused by "internal pressure and temperatures," began.

The "orderly withdrawal" begun a week ago has been hampered in recent days by temperatures here as low as 50 degrees below zero and poor visibility. The temperature on the ice floe today was about 35 degrees below zero and winds of 12 knots prevailed.

The 16 men now occupying the ice station include four civilian scientists and 12 military personnel. Three of the scientists and nine of the military men were members of the crew on the ice floe. The other men were flown in to aid in the withdrawal operation.

the disease usually is. Today, they are learning that in some cases the disease is part of a rare disease widespread through the body and due to a tiny parasitic organism. As a result, they are better able to attack the condition intelligently with drugs. Anyone with this disease ought to keep going to the best eye specialist (ophthalmologist) he can find. For the next three years, research is to be done on this disease at the Columbia - Presbyterian Center, in N. Y. City.
