

I was just thinking...

OTHER PEOPLE may be upset by heights, depths, or small, dark places.

I suffer from chronic apostrophobia.

In high-school English classes, I never managed to sort out the subjunctive from the dative, but I remember almost everything about apostrophes, those little commas that rose up in the world.

Several of the things I know about apostrophes have apparently been left out of the sign-painter's manual, the stationery and Christmas-card catalogues, and the mailbox business.

Every morning on my way to work, I pass a truck bearing the name International Electronic's. Okay. International Electronic's What? This is obviously a business operated by an electronic who doesn't want to tell something.

Then there are the people who sign their notes: Best regards from the Brown's. The Brown's cat? The Brown's green? The Brown's who? Or which?

I know this is petty of me. I ought to find something better to do with my time. Anyone who can read can comb through every column I write with a fine-tooth grammar and find the nits and lice of technical error which I cover with an excuse called "writing style."

But this apostrophobia haunts me. I'm reaching the stage where I yearn to stop the electronics truck on the highway and punch the unnecessary apostrophe right in its big fat blob. The most common catastrophe of all in the apostrophe business is attached to poor little innocent "its."

It's a fine day for me until I read: "It's motor was running." Does this indicate "It is motor was running" or "It's a motor and, by the way, it is running"?

It makes me mad. It doesn't render me comatose. It makes me prone to apostropheplexy. Its driving me crazy!

MOMMY!... MOMMY!... MOMMY!

To mothers, that cry means that there's another cut, scratch, scrape, or burn. It also means she should get iodine—but she often doesn't, because iodine burns and stings, upsets youngsters. Here's good news. Science has discovered a new kind of iodine that stops infection best yet doesn't burn or sting. It's polyvinylpyrrolidone-iodine, found only in ISODINE® ANTISEPTIC. Where other types of antiseptics may kill only 1, 2, or 3 types of germs, ISODINE kills all types—even virus and fungus. And up to 40 times faster. Get painless ISODINE ANTISEPTIC. Money-back guarantee.
