Growing Market for New Dental Chair Cushion Made in Medford

There is a growing west coast market for the new reclining dental chair cushion manufactured locally by the Professional Cushion Supply company, a division of the Modern Furniture company, 1222 South Riverside ave., owned and operated by Kenneth C. Kerr.

Although the company is keeping up with the demand for the new cushion now, orders are coming in so fast that it might not be long before he falls behind orders, Kerr told the Jackson County Chamber of Commerce roundtable luncheon at the Jackson hotel Monday.

Kerr was invited to speak as part of the roundtable's program to hear those local entrepreneurs who have started something new in business and are contributing to the prosperity of the area by means of their businesses.

Not His Own Invention
The cushion that Kerr is manufacturing is not entirely his own invention but the modifications that have made it so successful are his, and have been patented, he told the roundtable.

Since he took out his patent about six months ago, he has sold approximately 300 units and the demand is increasing as more and more dentists begin to recognize the worth of the new seating arrangement.

Kerr does not make chairs, but uses the dentist's old chairs. In approximately 30 minutes he can install a new reclining cushion with a headrest and an optional vibrator for $200. The work is done in the dentist's office.

Advantage Over Others
This is one advantage he has over other manufacturers who offer a new chair, which costs from $1,200 to $1,600. Kerr remodels the old chair giving essentially the same benefits.

Kerr said the reclining cushion is beneficial to dentists, not only because it looks modern, but because patients are immediately relaxed when they sit in it. They have to be relaxed, he added, for there are no foot rests or handles in the new chair, with which they can brace themselves into a tense position. Instead, they have contouring seats which gives comfort to the patient from head to toe.

The optional vibrator is located under the seat of the chair and further relaxes the patient. Although he did not expect them to, dentists have found they can work on the patient while the vibrator is operating which further helps to keep the patient relaxed, Kerr said.

In order to meet the demand for the cushion, Kerr temporarily discontinued upholstering furniture about a month ago, and will not start again until he can train a new crew to work on the dental chair cushions and keep up with the demand.

The market for the cushion has spiraled only recently Kerr said, because it took awhile for dentists to get used to the idea of a new cushion and make sure that it is an effective product, not just a gadget.

At two recent dental conventions in Portland and Seattle, Kerr found interest in the cushion at a high, indicating it has received widespread acceptance.

He is presently marketing the chair in Oregon, Washington, California, Utah, and Oklahoma, and has an offer from an ex-dentist in Ohio to sell it there.

Large Problem
One of his biggest problems, Kerr told the roundtable, was to find the best way of marketing the cushions. He declined offers from supply houses who wanted a franchise to sell the cushion for him, because he had no idea at that time of how large the market was going to be, and did not want to bind himself to a contract.

He has tried both mail-order sales and the direct sales approach and is still experimenting with both methods. Although the personal approach can sometimes be more effective, he has often found that dentists are too busy to receive a salesman during office hours and when they do receive him, they often do not give him as much time to sell the product as he should have.

By mailing circulars to first explain the product, he has found that dentists will often devote more time to studying it and then are in a better frame of mind to discuss it at a later date.

One break that Kerr has recently is in a new southern California dental clinic which has installed his cushions throughout. This is one of the best clinics in the world, he said.

Request From Dentist
He first got started with the chair when an Ashland dentist requested he make one of the new kind of units for him. Kerr did this, adding a few of his own modifications, and it was well accepted with several other local dentists requesting them also.

He then experimented with various modifications of the original version and came up with some that were good and for which there seemed to be a market, so he patented them.

Roy Smith had been scheduled to speak at yesterday's luncheon to discuss the functions of the Oregon bureau of labor, but according to Ken Baker, roundtable chairman, he was in an auto accident and unable to attend, so the roundtable invited Kerr, who had been unable to speak when invited two weeks ago.
