

Shock of Killing Nothing New To Louisiana State University

Baton Rouge — (UPI) — Louisiana State university, a 101-year-old school that is "shocked" by the bludgeoning of a woman professor, has a history of shocks beginning 35 years ago when another professor's skull was caved in.

Currently, the campus is agog over the charge that the dean of its graduate school, Dr. George H. Mickey, clubbed to death Dr. Margaret Raymond McMillan.

It will probably survive this, just as it has survived another professor's murder, Huey Long, and a president who tried to corner the wheat market, along with various more minor irritants such as racial rows.

In 1925, the school fidgeted as police scrutinized the 27 students who made up agronomy 23. They were looking for the person who took a hatchet and mutilated the head of agronomy professor Oscar Turner. Professor Turner's body was found in a dark hallway of the agronomy building.

Investigators said they were sure one of the students in agronomy 23 got caught by the professor while stealing final examination questions and killed him rather than be exposed.

But they never did find out who did it, and the murder is still unsolved.

Enter Huey Long
The legendary Kingfish, Huey P. Long, took an interest in the school and began building it up until it was known as the "school Huey built." But Huey wanted it run his way.

After the murder of the professor, things rocked along on a reasonably even keel until 1934, when Huey decided it would be good experience for the students to hold a mock election for a state seat that was then open.

The students thought it would be fun and so, in a spirit of fun, they elected a football hero, Huey apparently thought that was so funny that he tried to get the football player sworn in as senator — for real, not for fun. The football-playing senator-elect balked and so did the student body.

Someone wrote a nasty letter to the Reveille, the Student paper, chastising Huey for trying to use an "unconstitutional election" to get a football player made a senator.

Paper Censored
For that, Huey ordered the paper put under strict censorship. This incensed the students so that they had the temerity to complain verbally to Huey.

This resulted in seven journalism students being expelled and about 28 others suspended from the school. The Reveille wasn't published for several weeks when what remained of the staff quit in protest.

Huey Long was removed from the scene by an assassin, and things went quietly again until 1939. Then a bomb burst.

President Imprisoned
James Monroe Smith, president of LSU, having dropped more than $100,000 of the school's money trying to corner the wheat market, fled to Canada. But he was arrested, brought back and sent to Angola prison, where he spent his time chopping sugar cane.

On the heels of that — it is all known as the great Louisiana sandal and even a governor went to jail — a contractor, George Caldwell, was sentenced to a federal prison term for misappropriating WPA funds earmarked for a new football stadium.

His partner killed himself.

POPULATION DENSITY
Washington-Belgium is the most densely populated country in Europe. Its 653 persons per square mile is 21 times greater than the population density of the United States.

School News

Howard School

Mrs. Margaret Mann has two new boys, Robert Darling from Fairbanks, Alaska, and Neil Edmonds from Bend, Ore. Now Mrs. Mann's room has 26 students.

Mrs. Audrey Berry's room in social studies is learning about clothing. We have learned that our clothing is made from materials coming from plants, animals, or is man made such as plastic, rayon, nylon, orlon and dacron.

We are learning to multiply and find it fun. Multiplying is the short way of adding like numbers.

We have enjoyed the snowy weather and have made snowflakes and snowmen to decorate our room.

Mrs. Hulda Fisher's third grade is beginning the study of multiplication.

In science, we have learned about animals, mammals, reptiles, amphibians, insects, fish and birds. We have also studied about magnets.

We have some interesting library books in our room. We can read them in our spare time.

Standard School Broadcast on Hawaii National park inspired pupils in Mrs. Nita Birdseye's room to plan a bulletin board about the 50th state. Each pupil painted an original picture about Hawaii. We plan to take the best ideas and combine them for our bulletin board which will be made from torp paper.

We have been seeing film strips about famous men. This helps us to remember what we read in books.

Ronald Quackenbush's room has a new girl. Her name is Vicki Harper. She came to us from Central Point.

We are planning to make salt and flour maps of South America. We plan to show the physical features of the land.

We would like to thank our room mothers, Mrs. Poole and Mrs. Carpenter, for refreshments served at the Christmas party.

TO ASK CONFERENCE
New York — (UPI) — The president of the Inter-American Press association today was under instructions to confer with Cuban Premier Fidel Castro "concerning press problems in Cuba." The association's executive committee issued the instructions in the wake of a series of incidents in Cuba involving the arrest and detainment of U.S. newsmen.

Back Stairs: Many More Trips for Ike

By MERRIMAN SMITH
UPI White House Reporter
Washington — (UPI) — Back stairs at the White House: Give or take a few hours, President Eisenhower has precisely one year left in the

4-H NEWS

Antelope Clothing And Cooking
The meeting of the Antelope Clothing and Cooking 4-H club was held at the home of Elaine and Gloria Meyer recently.

Jo Anna Malloroy, junior cooking leader, checked to see if the assignments had been completed. Each member gave the recipes which she had made before the meeting.

New assignments were given and everyone is to give a report at the February meeting. Reports are to be about a favorite recipe each one and her family liked.

As a help to younger girls in the club, Paulette Anderson gave a demonstration on quick mix plain cake. The recipe is in the main dish meals project book.

Lola Ackerman, song leader, led the club in some songs from the 4-H song book.

Jennifer Nevin gave a demonstration on care of the hands. Jennifer showed some manicure instruments and told what they were used for.

Jo Anna Malloroy is going to get a window for a display during National 4-H Week. She is also in charge of finding a guest club to attend one meeting. The Antelope club has invited new clubs in the past.

Mrs. Don Anderson read an article about wool. She stressed the point that 4-Hers are not pressing their clothing enough as they make it. She also mentioned a new woolen fabric which is machine-washable.

At the next regular meeting, which will be Jan. 30, Alice Woolfolk and Karen Jossy will give a demonstration on how to fit patterns.

The next meeting will include a planned meal of soup, celery sticks, carrots, biscuits and honey, and cupcakes.

Karen Jossy had a serious operation on her leg so the club sent her a gift.

The meeting Jan. 30 will be at Donna Geren's house.
July Hill, Reporter

JOKE ON A JOKESTER
Dallas, Tex. — (UPI) — W. C. Jack, who his fellow workers said was a harmless practical joker around the office, had all his teeth pulled by a dental surgeon. His co-workers Monday sent him a pound of peanut brittle, six packages of corn chips, corn on the cob, salted peanuts and tooth picks.

The clue to Eisenhower's

hunting trip to the Georgia estate of W. Alton Jones was available well in advance, but few people recognized it as such. The week end before he flew south, the President was out on his skeet range in Gettysburg, sharpening up his shooting eye.

He rarely uses the skeet range unless he plans to do some hunting or wants to try out a new gun. In this case, it was both because he brought back several inviting gift guns from Europe.

Could it be a sign of world conditions? Frequently, at weekly intervals, an official of the Central Intelligence Agency comes to the White House for a highly secret briefing on hot spots around the globe for the benefit of ranking members of the President's staff.

This is in addition to the daily situation report for the President from CIA and the CIA reviews before the National Security Council.

The President very much dislikes the pigeons that on occasion dirty up his glistening clean barn roof in Gettysburg. He's been known to take out after them with his shotgun.

Now, he's after birds of another feather — starlings at the White House.

The parks service has been trying out a new anti-startling spray. It worked with some success on the South Grounds of the White House where the trees were drenched with the new potion.

Recently the North Grounds were sprayed and what happened? The starlings moved across the street to the old State Department building.

So, the spray program had to be widened to include the trees around Old State and therein lies a new problem: The spray apparently has run most of the pesky birds away from the White House, but to where? Next door.

The park people, to be fair about the whole thing, may have to end up spraying an awful lot of downtown real estate. By the time they reach the suburbs, the spray at the White House will be worn off the trees, the starlings will be back and the process will have to start all over again.

Seems sort of hopeless.

Do you realize that

LIBERAL INCOME RETURNS

are available from

TAX-FREE BONDS?

Most bonds issued by cities, counties or states are exempt from Federal income tax. Territorial bonds of Alaska and Hawaii (before statehood) and of Puerto Rico are usually exempt from both state and Federal taxation. In many cases, actual income from good municipal bonds is higher than income from quality common stocks.

Currently, many bonds are selling to yield 4% and over to maturity.

Zilka Smither & Co. Inc.

14 South Central Medford, Oregon Phone SP 2-6119

Richard E. Watson, Manager E. John Rossi
Other Offices: Oregon—Portland, Salem, Eugene, Coos Bay, Hood River, The Dalles and Astoria
Washington: Seattle, Longview and Vancouver

Please send me FREE booklet "The Story Behind Municipal Bonds."

Name.....
Address.....
City..... Zone..... State.....

HOLDS ITS VALUE LIKE IT HOLDS THE ROAD

Latest figures from National Market Reports, Inc.—official source of automobile resale data—show Wide-Track Pontiacs recover more of their original value than any other car in their price class! Add this to the hundreds of other apparent reasons for becoming a 1960 Pontiac owner, and see your dealer this very week.

PONTIAC—THE ONLY CAR WITH WIDE-TRACK WHEELS.

SEE YOUR LOCAL AUTHORIZED PONTIAC DEALER... WHO ALSO SELLS GOODWILL USED CARS WITH MORE BARGAIN MILES PER DOLLAR

DEAN & TAYLOR PONTIAC CO.

6th and Grape

Medford

Wide-Track widens the stance, not the car. With the widest track of any car, Pontiac gives you better stability, less lean and sway, accurate control.

Kandy Kids
The regular meeting of the Kandy Kids Cooking club was held Jan. 13 at the leader's home.

The group finished planning the year's events and the club activities were also planned. The junior leader, Marsha Watson, read and explained the 4-H by-laws and constitution.

The next meeting will be held Feb. 10 at the leader's home, Doreen Bradshaw.
Carolee Kuest, Reporter

Grease Squirters
The second meeting of the Applegate Grease Squirters was held at the home of David Christensen. Terry Miller, president, called the meeting to order.

The group discussed building a carry-all rack which would operate by the hydraulic behind the tractor and one that would not operate by the hydraulic system. They also discussed the building of a dump hook-up on the tractor which would improve the present commercially sold racks.

The club would do this to raise money for a future entertainment and to give the members of the club experience with the operation of machine shop equipment. It was decided to have the junior leader draw up the plans for the rack.

The president appointed Tommy Herriot and David Christenson to try to get someone to sponsor the group.

After the discussion, record books were discussed. Some of the members received their books at the meeting as there was a shortage of them.

Mrs. Christensen served refreshments.

The members divided into groups for various games conducted by the game leader. The meeting was adjourned at 9:30 a.m.
David Pittock, Reporter

Teen-a-Paige
The regular meeting of the Crater Teen-a-Paige 4-H club was held at the home of Sharon Thompson, Central Point, last week.

The future meetings were discussed and told where they would be held. Also the new goals for the year were discussed. A demonstration on laying a pattern was given by Sharon Trautman and Sharon Thompson.

Refreshments were served by Sharon and her mother.

The next meeting will be held at the home of Carolyn Sidener on Hanley rd., Central Point.
Sue Higinbotham, Reporter

Back Stairs: Many More Trips for Ike

White House, and during that year he can be relied upon to make many more trips of the type he made last week to Albany, Ga.

Eisenhower now accepts the jet age and intends to live in it. He sped from Washington to southwest Georgia in less time than it takes him to motor from the White House to his farm in Gettysburg.

His government 707 jet transport puts good weather within close reach of Washington when measured in flying time, and the President is not expected to spend too many week ends cooped up by bad weather.

The clue to Eisenhower's

hunting trip to the Georgia estate of W. Alton Jones was available well in advance, but few people recognized it as such. The week end before he flew south, the President was out on his skeet range in Gettysburg, sharpening up his shooting eye.

He rarely uses the skeet range unless he plans to do some hunting or wants to try out a new gun. In this case, it was both because he brought back several inviting gift guns from Europe.

Could it be a sign of world conditions? Frequently, at weekly intervals, an official of the Central Intelligence Agency comes to the White House for a highly secret briefing on hot spots around the globe for the benefit of ranking members of the President's staff.

This is in addition to the daily situation report for the President from CIA and the CIA reviews before the National Security Council.

The President very much dislikes the pigeons that on occasion dirty up his glistening clean barn roof in Gettysburg. He's been known to take out after them with his shotgun.

Now, he's after birds of another feather — starlings at the White House.

The parks service has been trying out a new anti-startling spray. It worked with some success on the South Grounds of the White House where the trees were drenched with the new potion.

Recently the North Grounds were sprayed and what happened? The starlings moved across the street to the old State Department building.

So, the spray program had to be widened to include the trees around Old State and therein lies a new problem: The spray apparently has run most of the pesky birds away from the White House, but to where? Next door.

The park people, to be fair about the whole thing, may have to end up spraying an awful lot of downtown real estate. By the time they reach the suburbs, the spray at the White House will be worn off the trees, the starlings will be back and the process will have to start all over again.

Seems sort of hopeless.

MAIL TRIBUNE, Medford, Or. Wednesday, Jan. 20, 1960

JOKE ON A JOKESTER
Dallas, Tex. — (UPI) — W. C. Jack, who his fellow workers said was a harmless practical joker around the office, had all his teeth pulled by a dental surgeon. His co-workers Monday sent him a pound of peanut brittle, six packages of corn chips, corn on the cob, salted peanuts and tooth picks.

The clue to Eisenhower's

hunting trip to the Georgia estate of W. Alton Jones was available well in advance, but few people recognized it as such. The week end before he flew south, the President was out on his skeet range in Gettysburg, sharpening up his shooting eye.

He rarely uses the skeet range unless he plans to do some hunting or wants to try out a new gun. In this case, it was both because he brought back several inviting gift guns from Europe.

Could it be a sign of world conditions? Frequently, at weekly intervals, an official of the Central Intelligence Agency comes to the White House for a highly secret briefing on hot spots around the globe for the benefit of ranking members of the President's staff.

This is in addition to the daily situation report for the President from CIA and the CIA reviews before the National Security Council.

The President very much dislikes the pigeons that on occasion dirty up his glistening clean barn roof in Gettysburg. He's been known to take out after them with his shotgun.

Now, he's after birds of another feather — starlings at the White House.

The parks service has been trying out a new anti-startling spray. It worked with some success on the South Grounds of the White House where the trees were drenched with the new potion.

Recently the North Grounds were sprayed and what happened? The starlings moved across the street to the old State Department building.

So, the spray program had to be widened to include the trees around Old State and therein lies a new problem: The spray apparently has run most of the pesky birds away from the White House, but to where? Next door.

The park people, to be fair about the whole thing, may have to end up spraying an awful lot of downtown real estate. By the time they reach the suburbs, the spray at the White House will be worn off the trees, the starlings will be back and the process will have to start all over again.

Seems sort of hopeless.

MAIL TRIBUNE, Medford, Or. Wednesday, Jan. 20, 1960

JOKE ON A JOKESTER
Dallas, Tex. — (UPI) — W. C. Jack, who his fellow workers said was a harmless practical joker around the office, had all his teeth pulled by a dental surgeon. His co-workers Monday sent him a pound of peanut brittle, six packages of corn chips, corn on the cob, salted peanuts and tooth picks.

The clue to Eisenhower's

hunting trip to the Georgia estate of W. Alton Jones was available well in advance, but few people recognized it as such. The week end before he flew south, the President was out on his skeet range in Gettysburg, sharpening up his shooting eye.

He rarely uses the skeet range unless he plans to do some hunting or wants to try out a new gun. In this case, it was both because he brought back several inviting gift guns from Europe.

Could it be a sign of world conditions? Frequently, at weekly intervals, an official of the Central Intelligence Agency comes to the White House for a highly secret briefing on hot spots around the globe for the benefit of ranking members of the President's staff.

This is in addition to the daily situation report for the President from CIA and the CIA reviews before the National Security Council.

The President very much dislikes the pigeons that on occasion dirty up his glistening clean barn roof in Gettysburg. He's been known to take out after them with his shotgun.

Now, he's after birds of another feather — starlings at the White House.

The parks service has been trying out a new anti-startling spray. It worked with some success on the South Grounds of the White House where the trees were drenched with the new potion.

Recently the North Grounds were sprayed and what happened? The starlings moved across the street to the old State Department building.

So, the spray program had to be widened to include the trees around Old State and therein lies a new problem: The spray apparently has run most of the pesky birds away from the White House, but to where? Next door.

The park people, to be fair about the whole thing, may have to end up spraying an awful lot of downtown real estate. By the time they reach the suburbs, the spray at the White House will be worn off the trees, the starlings will be back and the process will have to start all over again.

Seems sort of hopeless.

MAIL TRIBUNE, Medford, Or. Wednesday, Jan. 20, 1960

JOKE ON A JOKESTER
Dallas, Tex. — (UPI) — W. C. Jack, who his fellow workers said was a harmless practical joker around the office, had all his teeth pulled by a dental surgeon. His co-workers Monday sent him a pound of peanut brittle, six packages of corn chips, corn on the cob, salted peanuts and tooth picks.

The clue to Eisenhower's

hunting trip to the Georgia estate of W. Alton Jones was available well in advance, but few people recognized it as such. The week end before he flew south, the President was out on his skeet range in Gettysburg, sharpening up his shooting eye.

He rarely uses the skeet range unless he plans to do some hunting or wants to try out a new gun. In this case, it was both because he brought back several inviting gift guns from Europe.

Could it be a sign of world conditions? Frequently, at weekly intervals, an official of the Central Intelligence Agency comes to the White House for a highly secret briefing on hot spots around the globe for the benefit of ranking members of the President's staff.

This is in addition to the daily situation report for the President from CIA and the CIA reviews before the National Security Council.

The President very much dislikes the pigeons that on occasion dirty up his glistening clean barn roof in Gettysburg. He's been known to take out after them with his shotgun.

Now, he's after birds of another feather — starlings at the White House.

The parks service has been trying out a new anti-startling spray. It worked with some success on the South Grounds of the White House where the trees were drenched with the new potion.

Recently the North Grounds were sprayed and what happened? The starlings moved across the street to the old State Department building.

So, the spray program had to be widened to include the trees around Old State and therein lies a new problem: The spray apparently has run most of the pesky birds away from the White House, but to where? Next door.

The park people, to be fair about the whole thing, may have to end up spraying an awful lot of downtown real estate. By the time they reach the suburbs, the spray at the White House will be worn off the trees, the starlings will be back and the process will have to start all over again.

Seems sort of hopeless.

MAIL TRIBUNE, Medford, Or. Wednesday, Jan. 20, 1960

JOKE ON A JOKESTER
Dallas, Tex. — (UPI) — W. C. Jack, who his fellow workers said was a harmless practical joker around the office, had all his teeth pulled by a dental surgeon. His co-workers Monday sent him a pound of peanut brittle, six packages of corn chips, corn on the cob, salted peanuts and tooth picks.

The clue to Eisenhower's

hunting trip to the Georgia estate of W. Alton Jones was available well in advance, but few people recognized it as such. The week end before he flew south, the President was out on his skeet range in Gettysburg, sharpening up his shooting eye.

He rarely uses the skeet range unless he plans to do some hunting or wants to try out a new gun. In this case, it was both because he brought back several inviting gift guns from Europe.

Could it be a sign of world conditions? Frequently, at weekly intervals, an official of the Central Intelligence Agency comes to the White House for a highly secret briefing on hot spots around the globe for the benefit of ranking members of the President's staff.

This is in addition to the daily situation report for the President from CIA and the CIA reviews before the National Security Council.

The President very much dislikes the pigeons that on occasion dirty up his glistening clean barn roof in Gettysburg. He's been known to take out after them with his shotgun.

Now, he's after birds of another feather — starlings at the White House.

The parks service has been trying out a new anti-startling spray. It worked with some success on the South Grounds of the White House where the trees were drenched with the new potion.

Recently the North Grounds were sprayed and what happened? The starlings moved across the street to the old State Department building.

So, the spray program had to be widened to include the trees around Old State and therein lies a new problem: The spray apparently has run most of the pesky birds away from the White House, but to where? Next door.

The park people, to be fair about the whole thing, may have to end up spraying an awful lot of downtown real estate. By the time they reach the suburbs, the spray at the White House will be worn off the trees, the starlings will be back and the process will have to start all over again.

Seems sort of hopeless.

MAIL TRIBUNE, Medford, Or. Wednesday, Jan. 20, 1960

JOKE ON A JOKESTER
Dallas, Tex. — (UPI) — W. C. Jack, who his fellow workers said was a harmless practical joker around the office, had all his teeth pulled by a dental surgeon. His co-workers Monday sent him a pound of peanut brittle, six packages of corn chips, corn on the cob, salted peanuts and tooth picks.

The clue to Eisenhower's

hunting trip to the Georgia estate of W. Alton Jones was available well in advance, but few people recognized it as such. The week end before he flew south, the President was out on his skeet range in Gettysburg, sharpening up his shooting eye.

He rarely uses the skeet range unless he plans to do some hunting or wants to try out a new gun. In this case, it was both because he brought back several inviting gift guns from Europe.

Could it be a sign of world conditions? Frequently, at weekly intervals, an official of the Central Intelligence Agency comes to the White House for a highly secret briefing on hot spots around the globe for the benefit of ranking members of the President's staff.

This is in addition to the daily situation report for the President from CIA and the CIA reviews before the National Security Council.

The President very much dislikes the pigeons that on occasion dirty up his glistening clean barn roof in Gettysburg. He's been known to take out after them with his shotgun.

Now, he's after birds of another feather — starlings at the White House.

The parks service has been trying out a new anti-startling spray. It worked with some success on the South Grounds of the White House where the trees were drenched with the new potion.

Recently the North Grounds were sprayed and what happened? The starlings moved across the street to the old State Department building.

So, the spray program had to be widened to include the trees around Old State and therein lies a new problem: The spray apparently has run most of the pesky birds away from the White House, but to where? Next door.

The park people, to be fair about the whole thing, may have to end up spraying an awful lot of downtown real estate. By the time they reach the suburbs, the spray at the White House will be worn off the trees, the starlings will be back and the process will have to start all over again.

Seems sort of hopeless.

MAIL TRIBUNE, Medford, Or. Wednesday, Jan. 20, 1960

JOKE ON A JOKESTER
Dallas, Tex. — (UPI) — W. C. Jack, who his fellow workers said was a harmless practical joker around the office, had all his teeth pulled by a dental surgeon. His co-workers Monday sent him a pound of peanut brittle, six packages of corn chips, corn on the cob, salted peanuts and tooth picks.

The clue to Eisenhower's

hunting trip to the Georgia estate of W. Alton Jones was available well in advance, but few people recognized it as such. The week end before he flew south, the President was out on his skeet range in Gettysburg, sharpening up his shooting eye.

He rarely uses the skeet range unless he plans to do some hunting or wants to try out a new gun. In this case, it was both because he brought back several inviting gift guns from Europe.

Could it be a sign of world conditions? Frequently, at weekly intervals, an official of the Central Intelligence Agency comes to the White House for a highly secret briefing on hot spots around the globe for the benefit of ranking members of the President's staff.

This is in addition to the daily situation report for the President from CIA and the CIA reviews before the National Security Council.

The President very much dislikes the pigeons that on occasion dirty up his glistening clean barn roof in Gettysburg. He's been known to take out after them with his shotgun.

Now, he's after birds of another feather — starlings at the White House.

The parks service has been trying out a new anti-startling spray. It worked with some success on the South Grounds of the White House where the trees were drenched with the new potion.

Recently the North Grounds were sprayed and what happened? The starlings moved across the street to the old State Department building.

So, the spray program had to be widened to include the trees around Old State and therein lies a new problem: The spray apparently has run most of the pesky birds away from the White House, but to where? Next door.

The park people, to be fair about the whole thing, may have to end up spraying an awful lot of downtown real estate. By the time they reach the suburbs, the spray at the White House will be worn off the trees, the starlings will be back and the process will have to start all over again.

Seems sort of hopeless.

MAIL TRIBUNE, Medford, Or. Wednesday, Jan. 20, 1960

JOKE ON A JOKESTER
Dallas, Tex. — (UPI) — W. C. Jack, who his fellow workers said was a harmless practical joker around the office, had all his teeth pulled by a dental surgeon. His co-workers Monday sent him a pound of peanut brittle, six packages of corn chips, corn on the cob, salted peanuts and tooth picks.

The clue to Eisenhower's

hunting trip to the Georgia estate of W. Alton Jones was available well in advance, but few people recognized it as such. The week end before he flew south, the President was out on his skeet range in Gettysburg, sharpening up his shooting eye.

He rarely uses the skeet range unless he plans to do some hunting or wants to try out a new gun. In this case, it was both because he brought back several inviting gift guns from Europe.

Could it be a sign of world conditions? Frequently, at weekly intervals, an official of the Central Intelligence Agency comes to the White House for a highly secret briefing on hot spots around the globe for the benefit of ranking members of the President's staff.

This is in addition to the daily situation report for the President from CIA and the CIA reviews before the National Security Council.

The President very much dislikes the pigeons that on occasion dirty up his glistening clean barn roof in Gettysburg. He's been known to take out after them with his shotgun.

Now, he's after birds of another feather — starlings at the White House.

The parks service has been trying out a new anti-startling spray. It worked with some success on the South Grounds of the White House where the trees were drenched with the new potion.

Recently the North Grounds were sprayed and what happened? The starlings moved across the street to the old State Department building.

So, the spray program had to be widened to include the trees around Old State and therein lies a new problem: The spray apparently has run most of the pesky birds away from the White House, but to where? Next door.

The park people, to be fair about the whole thing, may have to end up spraying an awful lot of downtown real estate. By the time they reach the suburbs, the spray at the White House will be worn off the trees, the starlings will be back and the process will have to start all over again.

Seems sort of hopeless.

MAIL TRIBUNE, Medford, Or. Wednesday, Jan. 20, 1960

JOKE ON A JOKESTER
Dallas, Tex. — (UPI) — W. C. Jack, who his fellow workers said was a harmless practical joker around the office, had all his teeth pulled by a dental surgeon. His co-workers Monday sent him a pound of peanut brittle, six packages of corn chips, corn on the cob, salted peanuts and tooth picks.

The clue to Eisenhower's

hunting trip to the Georgia estate of W. Alton Jones was available well in advance, but few people recognized it as such. The week end before he flew south, the President was out on his skeet range in Gettysburg, sharpening up his shooting eye.

He rarely uses the skeet range unless he plans to do some hunting or wants to try out a new gun. In this case, it was both because he brought back several inviting gift guns from Europe.

Could it be a sign of world conditions? Frequently, at weekly intervals, an official of the Central Intelligence Agency comes to the White House for a highly secret briefing on hot spots around the globe for the benefit of ranking members of the President's staff.

This is in addition to the daily situation report for the President from CIA and the CIA reviews before the National Security Council.

The President very much dislikes the pigeons that on occasion dirty up his glistening clean barn roof in Gettysburg. He's been known to take out after them with his shotgun.

Now, he's after birds of another feather — starlings at the White House.

The parks service has been trying out a new anti-startling spray. It worked with some success on the South Grounds of the White House where the trees were drenched with the new potion.

Recently the North Grounds were sprayed and what happened? The starlings moved across the street to the old State Department building.

So, the spray program had to be widened to include the trees around Old State and therein lies a new problem: The spray apparently has run most of the pesky birds away from the White House, but to where? Next door.

The park people, to be fair about the whole thing, may have to end up spraying an awful lot of downtown real estate. By the time they reach the suburbs, the spray at the White House will be worn off the trees, the starlings will be back and the process will have to start all over again.

Seems sort of hopeless.

MAIL TRIBUNE, Medford, Or. Wednesday, Jan. 20, 1960

JOKE ON A JOKESTER
Dallas, Tex. — (UPI) — W. C. Jack, who his fellow workers said was a harmless practical joker around the office, had all his teeth pulled by a dental surgeon. His co-workers Monday sent him a pound of peanut brittle, six packages of corn chips, corn on the cob, salted peanuts and tooth picks.

The clue to Eisenhower's