Dogs Trained as Prison Guards

Montgomery, Ala. - (UPI) - Alabama state prison guards will exchange their shotguns for four-legged assistants soon.
Deputy state prisons director Frank Lee said guards at Kilby Prison, Attmore Prison Farm and Draper Correctional Center would be getting dogs as their assistants.
"By using dogs, we hope to remove the necessity of having the guards carry firearms," Lee said. "Although we aren't going to use the dogs in the cell blocks or where they might come in too close a contact with the prisoners, they will patrol the inside of the walls at night and other places where the only prisoners the dogs will come

Mrs. Howell announced the window display for the pack will be at Hubbard Brothers hardware during Boy Scout Week.

Howell gave the treasurer's report. It was announced the Akella doll was won by Den 5 with most attendance. Den 4 received the achievement flag. Den 6 conducted the retiring of the flag.

in contact with will be trying to escape."

Thomas McGinn, director of the Canine Protective Service of Brielle, N.J., who will train the dogs and their human companions, said the trained dogs "can capture a prisoner as well as a guard with a shotgun - and they inspire as much respect."

The dogs will undergo five or six months of intensive training before actually taking over their guard duties, McGinn said. Each dog will be assigned a permanent guard who will act as his handler and the pair will go through the training together, he said.

McGinn said the Correction Department already has a training course set up near the prison - three acres of jumps, obstacle courses and obedience areas.

Bodily Harm Avoided

During the training period the dogs will learn how to bring down and hold an escaped prisoner without doing bodily harm to him.

"A big dog - and we'll be using German shepherds and Doberman Pinschers - can bring down a full-grown man by jumping on his back," McGinn said.

"We'll also teach the dogs how to disarm a man of a gun or knife without hurting him. This training is similar to the training given dogs in the K-9 corps."

McGinn said he believes Alabama is the first state in the nation to use dogs as assistants for prison guards although "it's been done for some time in Europe and Canada and in most of the Army prison camps in the United States."

Prisoners Unhappy
McGinn, who specializes in training dogs for both tracking and police work, said the "guards" also would be used to "back up the bloodhounds. When a pack of bloodhounds comes within sight of an escaped prisoner, the guard dogs can be turned loose to capture him."
