Marines Ordered Home in Disgrace As Smugglers

London — (UPI) — Seven of the U.S. Marines who guard the embassy here are being sent home in disgrace as cigarette and whiskey smugglers.

Four sergeants and three corporals were reduced to private by a Navy court martial, fined and ordered back to the United States.

A British newspaper said the seven men would be flown back to the U.S., but the report could not be confirmed immediately. U.S. authorities have refused so far to identify the erring guards.

Based on Testimony

The case against the Marines was based on testimony by a Dutch aircraft worker, husband of a former embassy telephone operator, who said the Marines sold him tax-free cigarettes and whiskey.

The worker, Lambertus Van Veggel, had eight bottles of untaxed whiskey and more than 35 cartons of cigarettes in his car when he was caught. He told police he had more than 370 cartons of untaxed cigarettes at home.

Veggel was fined $700 for illegal possession of the untaxed goods. His $2,750 automobile was confiscated because he had not paid customs on it.
