Small Worlds Around Us

By Lynn M. Watkins

The Small, Secretive Shrew Is the Only Venomous Animal
"The taming of the shrew" is an impossibility. These tiny but vicious little demons are too high strung to live in captivity.

Shrews are so secretive few people ever see them, yet they are present in forests and fields. They are our smallest mammals. A full grown one is about one third the size of a mouse. Close examination reveals several differences between them and the mice. The shrew has a sharp, pointed head and small, almost invisible ears. Some have short tails while other species have no tail at all.

They have soft gray fur, and eyes that look as if the little animal were constantly quivering. Even when the little fellow is listening his head is seldom still. It moves from side to side and the sensitive nose twitches constantly.

Must Eat Often
The body processes of the shrew are geared so high they must eat at frequent intervals to keep from starving to death. This hunger drive keeps them in a feverish search for food day and night from the time they are born until they die. The high powered drive makes the shrew a vicious killer, with the courage and daring to attack animals several times its own size. The little demon will hunt until he finds a mouse, dash at it with a flashing rush, sink its sharp teeth into the victim's body and hang on like a bulldog.

But the mouse is up against something he cannot fight. Even if he gets loose and tries to escape by flight he can go but a few feet before his legs give way and he falls in a helpless heap. By the time the shrew arrives, the mouse is dead. All the time the shrew will be twittering shrilly, almost like a bird. Death comes to the mouse from the poison injected into the wound by the shrew's venomous teeth.

The shrew is the only venomous mammal known to exist in the entire world. At the base of the needle-sharp teeth in the little creature's mouth are salivary glands that secrete a deadly venom, similar to the venom of the coral snake. One puncture of the skin and the little mouse is past all hope. For some strange reason, probably instinctive, mice seem to know what will happen to them if they are in close contact with a shrew. When caged up together in close quarters, a mouse becomes frantic and has been known actually to die of fright.

Dies in Cage
Neither can the shrew be kept alive for long a few hours at most. The nervous excitement under which he lives burns him up in a short time. Besides the little creature would have to be fed every few minutes. The shrew's food consists mostly of insects. They are particularly fond of beetles, worms, snails and small animals such as frogs, mice or even small birds.

Even in death this tiny animal-ogre takes a diabolical revenge on those few creatures that would prey on him. When a shrew dies a powerful musk smell makes the body unpalatable to would-be predators. Even the house cat that catches a shrew once in a while, will seldom eat one. It's probably a good thing the shrew is so small; otherwise with his vicious nature he could be a dangerous wild animal. And they never live very long. They age fast because of nervous energy. He

FBI's Relentless Pursuit Keeps 10 Most Wanted Fugitives 'Very Nervous'

Washington (UPI) — Someone in America today are 10 men who have good reason to be very, very nervous.

They are the "10 most wanted fugitives" hunted relentlessly by the FBI. Sooner or later they find there is no place to hide.

One of them has been on the run for nine years. He is Frederick J. Tenuto who since was on the FBI list has May 24, 1950. Tenuto, 44, staged a spectacular break from Holmesburg Penitentiary, Pa., while serving a term for murder.

Also a long time on the loose is James Eddie Diggs, who made the FBI's big 10 list on Aug. 27, 1952. Diggs, a 46-year-old Negro, fled the law after being charged with the murder of his wife and two sons.

But the ability of Tenuto and Diggs to evade J. Edgar Hoover's G-men is the exception rather than the rule. The FBI set up the "most wanted" roster on March 14, 1950. In the past nine years, 124 men have been on the list and 114 of them have been scratched off by arrest, death or in one case—dismissal of the warrant against them.

Most of the wanted men have been caught as a result of nationwide publicity in newspapers, magazines, on radio and TV and from having their FBI mug shots on post office walls.

For many of the runaway criminals, capture is a relief. Nabbed in Seattle, Wash., on May 10, 1954, Alex Whitman told FBI agents "I was shaky. I was looking over my shoulder all the time. I was scared. I knew you would get me."

John Raleigh Cooke, wanted for armed robbery, had expected the law to close in. When trapped in Detroit on Oct. 20, 1953, he said: "It's a relief to be caught. I knew it was coming, but I didn't know when."

Some are philosophical. Joseph Levy, one of the most successful men ever investigated by the FBI, took his capture with resignation. Nailed at Churchill Downs race track at Louisville, Ky., on April 30, 1953, he said: "When you dance, you have to pay the piper and this is the end of the road for me."

Not many of the fugitives give up the hare and hound game voluntarily however. Carmine DiBiase turned himself in to the FBI on Aug. 28, 1958. He said he realized that running away would solve nothing. "I'm glad it's over," he was quoted as saying. "I had to come in." Others may feel that way, too, but they keep running anyway.

None of the criminals who were on the original "most wanted" list are on it any more. The last man removed from the original roster was Henry Randolph Mitchell. A federal warrant against Mitchell was dismissed on Aug. 28, 1958.

4-H Club News
Clothing and Cooking
The Antelope 4-H Clothing and Cooking club met recently at Donna Gerin's house.

The club is going to have a Valentine party instead of a Christmas party last December. The members' mothers are invited to attend and there will be a planned luncheon. Each person coming is to take a gift for the valentine exchange.

Assignments were given and reports were made on each girl's project. Roll call for the next meeting will be about a favorite vegetable and how it's fixed. The Senior Bread girls: Jo Anna Mallory, Alice Woolfolk, Georgia Hubbard and Karen Jossy, are going to give a demonstration on the variations of sweet rolls.

While the lunch was being prepared, songs were led by Lola Ackerman.

Alice Woolfolk and Karen Jossy gave worthwhile pointers in their demonstration, "How to Fit a Pattern."

Since members wanted to know the right way to sew, Mrs. Don Anderson and Mrs. E. A. Mallory promised to give a very complete demonstration on pressing March 5. The next meeting, a Valentine party, is set for Feb. 13 at Karen Jossy's home.

Daffy Dills
The sixth meeting of the Daffy Dills was held at Judy Frink's home Saturday, Feb. 6.

There's nothing as desperate as the FBI, but the most wanted fugitives do have some characteristics in common.

For one thing, a fugitive always tries to put as much mileage as possible between himself and the scene of the crime. The 112 fugitives rounded up to date have been arrested an average of 911 miles from the scene of the crime for which they are sought.

Some Traced Sooner
The hunted men have been picked up on the average of 182 days after being placed on the list. But some are traced a lot sooner than that.

Joseph James Brletic, who fled Clayton, Mo., to avoid prosecution for robbery was arrested 1,600 miles away at Lancaster, Calif., on Feb. 10, 1953—the day after he made the "10 most wanted."

The FBI says the fugitives on the list have averaged 5'9" in height, 158 pounds in weight and an age of 43. Their popular pastimes are gambling, drinking and playing the horses. They like to read detective magazines, crossword puzzle books and western fiction. Some have even tried their hand at writing articles and short stories.

In addition to Tenuto and Diggs, the FBI currently listed the following eight other fugitives for top priority capture:

David Daniel Keegan, Eugene Frank Newman, Angelo Luigi Pero, Edwin Sanford Garrison, Billy Owens Williams, Robert Garfield

Frederick Emerson Peters, a master impersonator with more than one hundred aliases, died shortly after being found unconscious in a New Haven, Conn., hotel where he had registered under an assumed name.

There is no such thing as a "criminal type," according to the FBI, but the most wanted fugitives do have some characteristics in common.

Alert To Continue Journey to Islands

Coos Bay — (UPI) — The 100-foot ship Alert will leave here Tuesday on another leg of its voyage to the Galapagos islands off the coast of South America. But this time only men will be aboard.

Don Harrsch, Seattle, skipper of the ship, said Sunday only 13 men will be aboard the Alert when it leaves here. The three women and four children who were on the ship when it docked here last Tuesday are being sent overland to San Diego, Calif.

The Alert was battered in heavy seas for 36 hours last week before putting in here with the help of the Coast Guard Tuesday.

Harrsch said all repairs have been made and the ship is ready to continue its journey.
