TO ATTEND QUEEN—Sister Helen Rowe, above, will attend Queen Elizabeth during the birth of the latter's third child. The Queen's baby will be Sister Rowe's fourth royal delivery. She also attended the births of Prince Michael of Kent, the Prince of Wales, and Princess Anne. Sister Rowe said the Queen does not mind whether the baby is a boy or girl.—(UPI Telephoto)

Baker Cattle Herds Studied for Scabies

Salem – (UPI) – Federal and state veterinarians have inspected all cattle herds within a 10-mile radius of the scabies, or mange, outbreak in Baker county and haven't found another mite-cause of the outbreak.

California has banned all Oregon cattle unless they meet release requirements. Dipping of the infected herd is continuing, according to the Oregon Department of Agriculture.

Salem–(UPI)–A report on a survey of migrant children attending Oregon schools during the regular school year will be heard by members of the advisory committee on education of migrant children when they meet here Saturday.

Small Worlds Around Us

By Lynn M. Watkins

Yes, Young Animals Play, But Their Time is Brief

An animal's "childhood" is very brief. What little play they do indulge in is mostly of a preparatory course to the seriousness of living.

In all animals as well as in the human race the early years are those devoted more or less to trying to have a good time. Troubles are few; in most instances an adult does most of the "watching out" and cushions the shocks of reality.

What little misfortunes befall the very young are soon forgotten in the joy of everyday living. Every young animal "plays at" the very things that will become work later on—actions that will teach him to meet the difficulties with which both rabbit or boy will be confronted. The better he is adjusted the longer he will live.

The earlier and the better the baby raccoon learns to climb a tree the surer he will be to reach a ripe old age. For like the rest of us, in order to survive in the highly competitive merry-go-round of life, he must learn. The baby animal must know who his enemies are, and how best to elude them.

Lambs romp and run. Puppies roll over one another or chase a ball. A kitten plays with a spool on the end of a string. Baby elephants have been seen rolling a large ball of dried clay. All these "childhood" pastimes are teaching the young for later work—the cat to chase something, the dog to hunt, the sheep or rabbit to escape by flight. All become forms of constructive play.

There are, of course, a few notable exceptions. A few animals are habitual playboys, and they never get over it. The porpoise and the otter are two important ones. The porpoise has earned the reputation of being a "clown."

Have It Easy

The reason is easy to understand. These mammals have it pretty easy; they have to exert very little time or effort to earning a living; therefore they have a great deal of leisure. Obviously they enjoy playing and love to perform. They can afford to be friendly and playful for they have but few enemies.

And the otter—even in advanced adulthood will slide down slippery slopes or chase one another in underwater sports like frolicsome children and apparently enjoy every minute of every day.

But the majority of birds, fish or mammals, like the humans, have only spare moments now and then for play. They, like us, have to apply themselves pretty constantly to the business of "making a living," whether it's gathering weed seeds from a vacant lot, catching a fish smaller than one's self, picking up worms from under a bush or trying to make a dollar from the sale of an aspirin tablet. "All work and very little play" seems to be the lot of monkey, mouse or man.
