Boat Makers Turn To Use of Wheels For Convenience

Chicago—UPI—Several boat-making manufacturers have taken a page from the airplane industry in designing and equipping their products this year.

Several propeller driven craft, steered by a "stick," and others with retractable wheels for convenient over-land transportation were featured at the 27th annual Chicago National Boat Show which ends Feb. 14.

Designed for Marshes
One of these, the Airboy Cub, made by Airboats Inc., St. Louis, Mo., is designed for use on shallow rivers and lakes, weed-infested water and marshes. The boat, which can operate in water one inch deep, also can be used on ice for winter fishing and hunting.

The Cub is made of aluminum and powered by a propeller mounted high in the rear. The aircraft-type stick steering mechanism can be operated with the knees, the exhibitor said, so that the hands are free for casting, fly fishing and trolling.

Retractable wheels are found on several houseboats and a land and water marine cruiser made by the Marine Division of Trail-It Co. a Manufacturing Co. Inc., Des Moines, Iowa.

Retractable Wheels
The boat, measuring 28½ feet, is equipped with heavy-duty retractable wheels, electric brakes and a detachable tongue for towing. It also can be used as a house trailer on land.

The craft sleeps six, has a fully equipped galley and sun deck. It is run by outboard motors.

Radio Man's Office Wired for Noise

Farmingdale, N. Y.—Heard of a room being wired for sound? There's one at Republic Aviation Corp. here that's wired for noise.

It's the "office" of Mannie Rundback, who earns his living listening to static in a completely copper-screened enclosure called a radio noise room.

Rundback keeps tabs on a duplicate of the radio compass and the communications system found in jet bombers.

He makes certain that equipment that goes into the bomber does not interfere with the communications system, the pilot's main source of navigation information.
