

Newlywed Pair Now Living In California City

Mr. and Mrs. Darwin Morehouse are making their home in Carlsbad, Calif., following their recent wedding.

The bride is the former Miss Barbara Ford, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Walter C. Ford, Carlsbad, and the bridegroom is a son of Mrs. Nellie Morehouse, 1063 Court street, and Samuel Morehouse, Lakeview.

The couple was married December 12 in the Carlsbad Gospel Tabernacle. The bride was attended by her sister, Mrs. H. L. Sumner, Jr., Carlsbad, Tommy Thompson was best man and H. L. Sumner, Jr. and R. C. Jones were ushers.

The bride's gown was of white lace styled with balloon sleeves and a sweetheart neckline. Her bouquet was of red and white carnations. The matron of honor wore a red faille dress.

A reception followed in the church hall, with Mrs. R. C. Jones, Mrs. Wilma Winans and Mrs. H. L. Sumner, Sr., assisting.

The bride attended Ocean-side High school and the bridegroom was graduated from Medford High school in 1956. He is a hospital corpsman third class with the United States Navy at Camp Pendleton, and will have served four years in May.

Punishment Doesn't Solve Problem of Delinquency

Washington, D.C.—Juvenile delinquency cannot be solved by punishment alone, or by any other single solution such as a change in the law, punishment of parents, recreation, or youth curfews.

This is what a new Children's Bureau publication, "A Look at Juvenile Delinquency," states. The solution depends on applying a wide variety of services which may be needed to help a delinquent child with his problems, it says. Prepared as a guide to the general public, and particularly community leaders, the new publication emphasizes prevention.

In a foreword, Mrs. Katherine B. Oettinger states, "Obviously it's more sensible to prevent delinquency than to try to unmake delinquents. Progress will come as each of us becomes concerned enough to take more responsibility for prevention as a part of our daily lives."

"A Look at Juvenile Delinquency" also points to research and more trained workers as basic tools for the job ahead. It describes how parents can help in their homes and in community planning to prevent delinquency. "The delinquent," it states, "is frequently an unhappy child because he has been steadily neglected by parents who are either too busy, too distant, or too inadequate."

The schools which touch the lives of every child can play a key role in spotting delinquents, the Bureau publication states, but cautions: "Little is gained by discovering problem children in schools if adequate resources to help them are not available in the community. Parent-Teacher associations can work for more specialized school services to help children with personality and emotional problems."

Some of the danger signs of delinquency which the schools and other community agencies can spot are identified as children who play truant, those who are angry, hostile, either overly-aggressive or withdrawn, or who are unduly slow in their school work.

Citizens are urged to become more active in preventive efforts and the provision of proper treatment services in "A Look at Juvenile Delinquency." "Complicity about juvenile delinquency is never justified," it warns. "The facts about juvenile delinquency must be brought out into the open before a community can mount an attack against it."

Single copies of "A Look at Juvenile Delinquency" can be purchased from the Superintendent of Documents, U.S. Government Printing Office, Washington 25, D.C., for 25 cents.

Members of Rogue Valley Country club ransacked attics and store rooms for clothing which they wore to the annual "hard times" party at the club February 6. Curtis Butterfield, attired in a T-shirt and old trousers held up by suspenders, was outshone by Mrs. Butterfield who wore red knit underwear, a mink jacket of by-gone days, black velvet gloves and a hat on which perched a bird of paradise in full feather.
