Steps in Census Taking Outlined For Householders

Steps in the procedure for conducting the 1960 census of population and housing have been explained by the bureau of census of the department of commerce.

The bureau estimates that the population will approximate 180 million persons, which will make the task of collecting and tabulating the statistics the biggest ever undertaken by the bureau.

The first step involving the public generally will come the latter part of March, when copies of an advance census report form will be mailed to every household in the United States.

On April 1, some 160,000 enumerators will begin visits to the country's households and they will transcribe from the advance census report to their own official schedules the information supplied by the public.

Questionnaire

At every fourth house, a census household questionnaire will be left for householders to give more detailed information. These will be mailed to the Eugene census district office.

After the census is completed, district supervisors will announce preliminary population totals for the counties. District offices will forward the enumerators' reports to the census of population operations office, Jeffersonville, Ind., where they will be microfilmed.

The data will be forwarded

Military Alliances Topic of IRL Event At U of O Campus

Eugene—"Do Our Military Alliances Serve Their Purpose?" will be discussed by high school members of the International Relations League from throughout Oregon when League members hold their annual conference at the University of Oregon Feb. 25-27.

A panel discussion by the Northwest International Studies Group, a selected number of scholars from Western universities, will open the conference Friday, Feb. 26.

Members of the group are Robert Loring Allen, department of economics, University of Oregon; Henry S. Aurand, member of the technical staff, Technical Military Planning Operation, General Electric company; J. Cudd Brown, political science department, Occidental college, Los Angeles; Conrad Joiner, assistant professor of political science, Louisiana State university; Karlin Kapper-Johnson, department of international affairs, Lewis and Clark college, Portland; Gene E. Martin, department of geography, University of Oregon; Khosrow Mostofi, division of social sciences, Portland State college; Charles P. Schleicher, department of political science, University of Oregon; Theodore L. Shay, department of political science, Williamette university; Dean John Swarthout, Portland State college; Kline Swygard, department of political science, Oregon State college; and Austin Walter, department of political science, Oregon State college.

Featured Speaker

Featured speaker for the conference Friday afternoon will be Sen. Wayne L. Morse, a member of the U.S. Senate Foreign Relations committee. He will talk on "Prospects for NATO."

The annual banquet on Friday night will have as speaker Dean Harry Alpert of the university's graduate school. Members will elect officers at the business meeting on Saturday morning.

The Office of International Studies and Overseas Administration of the university, which is coordinating the conference, expects more than 400 students and advisers from 45 high schools.

SOCTFA Members Attend Conference

Several representatives of the Southern Oregon Conservation and Tree Farm association plan to attend the 22nd annual Oregon Logging Conference in Eugene today.

Dale Prentice, secretary-manager of the association, will report on the cooperative fire protection plan in Southern Oregon as a member of a panel discussing forest protection methods.

Austin King, Bruce Blew and Darrel Davis, representing the log hauling phase of the industry, will serve on a panel discussing log truck taxes, laws, weights, and economics.

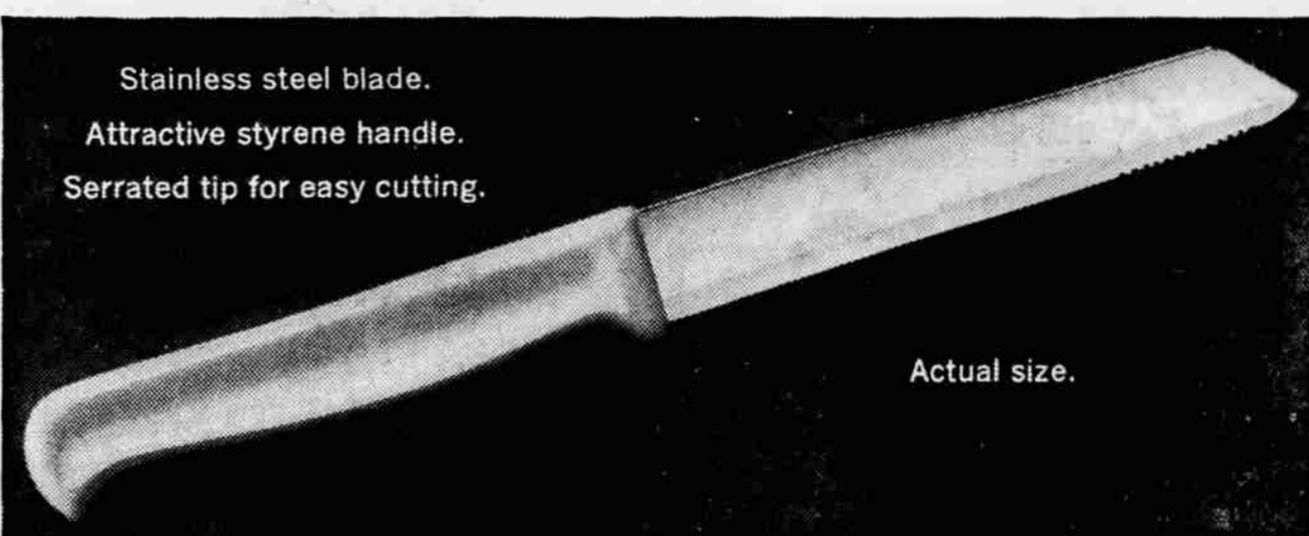

Others who will participate include Bob Nelson, Timber Products company, as a member of the "controlled slash burning" panel, and Richard Swan, Ross Lumber company, who will report on federal logging road specifications as a part of a panel on government road building and sale layout.

Glenn Duysen, president of SOCTFA, and other officers and committeemen of the association also plan to attend the meeting.

Logging and log-trucking operators, foresters and other lumber industry representatives from all of Oregon are expected to attend the three-day logging conference which ends Saturday, Feb. 27. Registration was held Wednesday evening followed by a no-host dinner at the Eugene hotel.
