The Medical Roundup

A Baby Who Cries Peculiarly

One reason why I have never been able to take much stock in present - day weird theories to the effect that the mental disturbances seen in adults were produced in childhood by unfortunate sexual experiences is that, in hundreds of such cases, when I have talked with the mother of a mentally disturbed patient, she has maintained that, from the first days or months of the person's life, he was decidedly different from her other children. She may say, "He cried angrily;" or "he was impatient;" or "he had a temper;" or "he slept poorly and kept us up half of each night;" or "he was a sad baby, while my other children were happy babies;" or "he was a slow, unobservant baby, while my others soon were wide-awake and trying always to look around;" or "he was a timid baby, always getting much frightened at something;" or "he was a solitary and unaffectionate child – he would never let me kiss him or show my love for him and as he grew older, I worried because he made no friends."

DR. ALVAREZ

Some people refuse to listen to such statements or to believe them; they prefer to read Freud, but I am sure that thousands of the women who will read this column will say, "That is absolutely right; from the day my Joe was born, he was very different from his three brothers; later he was not a normal, smiling and cooing baby, and every day I wondered about it. For years I saw a nervous breakdown coming, and wished I could find some doctor who could tell me what to do to help matters."

Temperament Difference

The other day I was talking to a very intelligent woman about the big differences in temperament between her (unlike) twin boys. One is an impatient lad who drives hard at everything he does, while the other is easy-going and good - tempered. The mother assures me that they were that way at birth, when one howled angrily if not given his bottle the minute he wanted it, and the other lay patiently and quietly until he was fed!

I was reminded of all this just now as I read that at the First International Medical Conference on Mental Retardation, held in Portland, Me., Dr. Samuel Karelitz played a series of tape recordings of the crying of recently-born infants which showed that the mothers were perfectly right when they said that, from birth, their baby, who was later found to have some brain disturbance, cried in a peculiar way.

Will Cry Immediately

Dr. Karelitz showed, also, that if one stimulates (perhaps pinches) a normal infant, he will cry almost immediately, while if one similarly stimulates a baby of the same age whose brain, at birth, was not built quite right, it may be seconds before he gets around to crying; and then his crying may be "interrupted and erratic." As Dr. Karelitz said, using this and other technics, experts can now often say that a particular new - born baby has some brain damage.

I wish every mother of a mentally - retarded or mildly epileptic, or schizophrenic child could know these facts, and have them ready when, one day, some psychriatrist or psychiatric visiting-nurse tries to break her heart by accusing her of having deliberately injured the child's mind by having loved him too much, or by once in his infancy having permitted him to see her naked. I, who receive many heartbroken letters from parents who have been abused in this way, know how terribly they suffer from these accusations, which many psychiatrists regard as quite unwarranted, and probably very stupid.

Industry's Stand On Retirement at 65 Said Softening

New York –(UPI)– Industry's solid front of compulsory retirement at 65 is "slowly crumbling," according to a survey.

Several big corporations, such as Consolidated Edison Co. and American Cyanamid Co., have stretched mandatory retirement ages from the traditional 65 to 68, the trade publication Industrial Relations News said.

The magazine made a survey of 28 additional major corporations and found a softening of attitudes toward the present retirement age. Twenty five per cent of the firms already have instituted "flexible" retirement policies, and another 25 per cent make "frequent exceptions" to the 65 retirement age.

"There's every likelihood that changes in corporate retirement policies, especially the trend toward flexibility, will pick up speed over the next 10 years," the study said.

Behind this switch in retirement policies, the report indicated, is the changing population makeup that will bring a shrinkage in the 35-44 age group and a 20 per cent increase in the number of older workers.

"These changes will require a major overhaul in the employment policies of many businesses," the trade magazine said. "Employers who do not abandon policies against . . . workers because of their age . . . may have real trouble in finding enough workers in the decade ahead."

Appling To Notify Candidates Soon

Salem – (UPI) – Secretary of State Howell Appling Jr. has announced he will notify candidates whom he intends to place on the Oregon presidential and vice presidential primary ballot next Wednesday morning.

The notifications will be 10 days ahead of schedule.

In the surprise move, Appling said "normally we would make such an announcement on March 11, the deadline for filing of candidacies.

"However, since the law permits only three days following March 11 during which one chosen may withdraw, we feel that in fairness to the candidates we should give at least tentative notice now so as to permit them ample time to have their names withdrawn if they so wish."

SEES SOUTHERN SUPPORT

Raleigh, N.C. – (UPI) – Lee Potter, the man charged with building the Republican Party in the South, says Vice President Richard M. Nixon could carry at least seven Southern states in the presidential election.

What Is The Law?

This column is prepared as a public service by the College of Law, Willamette University, Salem, to explain basic legal principles, not to provide legal advice. The reader is cautioned not to apply these cases to his own problems without an attorney's advice, for differing facts may change the outcome.

An Assailant Should Notify His Victim if He Gives Up The Fight

John had a grudge against Richard, and one evening he maliciously started a fight with him intending to kill him. After hitting Richard with a hammer and temporarily stunning him, John changed his mind and decided to leave without killing him.

Richard, however, threw off the effects of the blow and came at John with a knife; John was forced to kill him to save his own life.

John, charged with first degree murder, defended himself on the theory of self defense. He said there were two fights: one in which he was the aggressor and a second in which Richard was the aggressor. John says he abandoned the first fight before the second fight began. Yet, he was convicted of first degree murder.

Notification Necessary

The court said that an aggressor in a fight cannot claim that he struck the fatal blow in self defense unless, before the blow, he withdrew in good faith from the combat. Also, the aggressor must have brought home to the assaulted man notice that the fight had ended. Abandonment of the assault and reasonable notice are essential to restore to the aggressor the right of self defense.

Should the victim be injured to the extent that he cannot understand that the fight is over, then it is the assailant's fault and he must bear the consequences. If the assailant keeps his weapon in his hand, the victim is neither expected nor required to accept a statement that the fight is over.

Mind Taken Away

In the above example, if John had quit the combat before he killed Richard, he did not show it in any way. The court said, "while the deceased had eyes to see and ears to hear, he had no mind to comprehend, for his mind was taken from him (by John) at the first assault. Throughout the whole affray the deceased was guilty of no wrong. When (Richard) attempted to kill the defendant, he thought that he was acting in self-defense and, according to his lights, he was acting in self-defense."

If John had withdrawn from the fight and conveyed his withdrawal to Richard and if Richard had continued to come at John with a knife, then the theory of self-defense might have served John.

Youth Remanded To District Court

Klamath Falls – (UPI) – Bernard J. Fitzpatrick, 17, accused of the stabbing death last month of Ralph Ray Lawson, 52, Pasco, has been remanded from Juvenile Court to District Court on a first degree murder charge.

He was given until next Tuesday to decide if he wished a preliminary hearing.

Fitzpatrick was arrested in Seattle after Lawson's body was found off a side road near Oregon's Mt. Hood. Authorities said Lawson was stabbed to death with a bayonet near Crescent, Ore.
