

In the Days News

By FRANK JENKINS

Up at Pullman the other day, the director of the Washington State University library discovered that somebody had ripped one of the articles from a book on the library's shelves.

Title of the article: "Cheating—How It Can Be Stopped."

CYNICAL guess: The thief was more interested in how cheating can be PRACTICED than in how it can be prevented.

FROM Los Angeles: Actress Dolores Donlon got a divorce from TV producer Victor Orsatti after testifying that her husband spurned her meals, kicked the table and the TV set and threw plates on the floor. She added: "My husband was preoccupied with his work 24 hours a day. He was nervous and high strung."

ANOTHER one from L.A. Ruth Osborn, 29, a secretary by occupation, obtained a default divorce from George L. Osborn, 32. She testified that her husband's fondness for sleep broke up their marriage in less than a month.

"He wouldn't talk to me or to my mother," she told the judge. "He'd just fall asleep. The day we separated, we quarreled—AND IN THE MIDDLE OF THE QUARREL HE FELL ASLEEP. When he woke up, he packed his bags and left."

HMMMMMM. Maybe the gals should have SWAPPED HUSBANDS. In that event, everybody might have lived happily ever afterward.

IN HIS South American tour, Ike moves on from Brazil to Argentina—where, as in Brazil, he FACES PROBLEMS.

But—

THEY are DIFFERENT.

BRAZIL is dancing down the primrose path, spending money with both hands and LOVING IT—inflation and all. All it wants from Uncle Sam is MORE MONEY so that it can go on spending wild and free.

Argentina had its spending binge under Dictator Peron. Peron's successor, President Frondizi (pronounced FRON-DEE-see) has had to inaugurate an AUSTERITY PROGRAM—which the Argentines just . . . don't . . . like. PERIOD!

President Frondizi wants more money, preferably in large bills, from Uncle Sam so that he won't have to be quite so austerite.

It's a weird world. Isn't it?

FIRST BIRTHDAYS—The long awaited day has arrived for three Seattle youngsters as they await the signal to blow out the candle on their first birthday cake. All were born Feb. 29, 1956, and this is their first birthday. Left to right are Lisa Gianelli, Danny Webster and Kathy Berg. (UPI Telephoto)

Senior Citizens Warned Against Swindling Schemes

Senior citizens have been warned by the Medford Chamber of Commerce against swindling schemes designed to frighten them into buying some expensive product or service which they neither want nor need.

The warning was sounded this week in a statement released by Chamber Manager Don McNeil.

McNeil's statement mentioned fly-by-night roof, gutter and chimney repairmen whose "pride is not in their work, but in gyping the public. The prime victims of such swindlers are the elderly, particularly widows."

Owners Frightened

These con men operate, the statement said, by pretending they noticed a chimney or roof in dangerous condition while "just happening to be in the neighborhood." They frighten the home owners by telling them the chimney may fall over or that he or she is in danger of being asphyxiated.

Once the homeowner is frightened enough, McNeil said, he or she is usually victimized in two ways. First, the swindler charges an exorbitant price for whatever minor repairing is done. Second, the quality of the work done is usually so slipshod as to require further repairs by a reputable operator.

As an example, McNeil listed a typical complaint as reported to the local chamber by the National Better Business Bureau:

"An elderly widow living on social security was called upon by a repairman who produced a 'loose brick' and assured her that unless her chimney was fixed at once, she would be asphyxiated. 'He wouldn't take no for an answer,' she reported. He kindly consented to drive the widow to her bank so she could withdraw $110 for the job. Later she was informed that a fair price for the work done would have been $35."

Relatives, attorneys, friends and neighbors can be helpful in protecting the elderly from such victimization, McNeil continued, by reminding them of the following recommendations:

Sign no contracts for major purchases or repairs without consulting your attorney, relatives, friends or neighbors. Always have an experienced, trusted person present when any contract is signed.

Deal with reliable business people, not strangers. Ask the chamber of commerce for a report on anyone with whom you contemplate doing business.

Never let anyone rush you into giving an order or signing a contract. Take your time to consult others.

Avoid any salesman who attempts to frighten you into giving an order. Reputable business does not seek orders by scaring people. Consult others about attempts to alarm you.

When you are in need of major repairs, get estimates from several firms known to you or trusted persons as reliable. Reputable firms are entirely willing to give estimates in advance of what a job will cost.

UO Sophomore Named Winter Carnival Queen

Timberline Lodge—(UPI)—Kay Russell, a 20-year-old sophomore at the University of Oregon, was crowned queen of the Fourth Annual Collegiate Winter Carnival here Saturday.

Miss Russell, a hazel-eyed Yakima, Wash., girl, with a wide smile, was picked from among 14 candidates from the Pacific Northwest.

Chief export product of Chile is nitrate. In World War I Chile was neutral and sold nitrate to both Britain and Germany.

When it came to cussing, farmer Obediah took the cake. People from all over came to marvel at his ability to cuss for 15 minutes at a stretch without so much as taking time out to bite off a chew of terbacky.

One stormy afternoon word went around that the brand new bakery barn had collapsed, burying Obediah's new 1960 station wagon. Everybody rushed over to hear what promised to be a world's record in continuous profanity. The extent of the misfortune proved too much for him, however. He shook his head and announced, "You'll have to excuse me, folks. I just cannot cuss enough to do justice to the occasion."

A TV comic had taken up ice skating between bouts with John Barleycorn, and progressed to the point where he boasted about his figure 8s. "That's the simplest trick on ice," scoffed his producer. "Slide do it every day."

"Not the way I do it," said the comic. "I make a 5 with one foot and a 3 with the other."

Chessman's Chances To Escape Ninth Rendezvous With Death Believed Slim

By ROBERT STRAND

San Francisco — (UPI) — On eight separate occasions, Caryl Chessman has dodged a rendezvous with death in the San Quentin gas chamber.

What are his chances of escaping a ninth execution date?

Most Californians, including Chessman but not including his attorneys, would say the chance is zero.

His hopes rest with the courts and the Legislature, which will vote once again upon the capital punishment question sometime next month.

A hearing before Superior Judge John G. Barnes will be held Wednesday in Los Angeles to set a new date for Chessman's execution after his present 60-day reprieve ends. No Jurisdiction Claimed District Attorney William B. McKesson sought in court Thursday to set April 18 as the new date of execution, immediately following the 60-day reprieve. Chessman's attorneys, A. L. Wirin and George Davis, opposed the petition on the grounds the court has no jurisdiction because of the reprieve.

Davis said he was confident another execution date would never be set and the convict-author would not die in the San Quentin gas chamber.

But a United Press International poll has shown that a majority of the lawmakers in both houses are opposed to abolishing the gas chamber.

And the courts have heard Chessman's arguments many times and rejected them over and over in the 11½ years the convict-author has spent in death row.

Chessman, who taught himself law while a prisoner, says he won't go to the courts again.

Attorneys Hold Out

His attorneys, of course, may do so, but they pin more hope upon the chance that the Legislature may refuse to settle the capital punishment question and pass the decision to the people themselves.

Many legislators are unhappy about having to decide such a controversial problem, especially in an election year. Despite this, Gov. Edmund

G. Brown has indicated that as far as he was concerned, Chessman's only hope for life lay with the Legislature.

The Governor said he was "powerless" to take any further clemency or reprieve action for Chessman.

"Chessman Will Die"

He was asked if rejection of the measure to abolish capital punishment would mean that "Chessman will die."

"If the Legislature does not act upon it, I am powerless to do so," was his reply.

"I would say that any further reprieve merely because of any personal feelings on my part would be an abuse of power."

Some of the state's lawmakers have urged that the people, not the Legislature, should settle the matter.

Davis claims that he and other opponents of the gas chamber could swing a majority of the voters.

Davis would rely upon support of church groups, psychiatrists, penologists and Gov. Brown in such a state-wide battle. Davis expects to employ a pro-Chessman song and doorbell-ringers in an emotional, free - swinging campaign.

Experienced guessers of public opinion, however, are unanimous in the belief that at the moment, at least, a majority of Californians favor the gas chamber.

Chessman, 38, a habitual criminal, was convicted of kidnaping, robbery and sex crimes and became a symbol because he eluded eight death dates and because, while he faces the death penalty, he did not kill anybody.

The condemned man described his situation this week as "hopeless."

He noted, especially, that many California lawyers have stated that it is the Chessman case itself which makes it impossible to abolish the gas chamber.

Chessman's Ability

That's because Californians have been inflamed by Chessman's ability to stall the processes of the courts and avoid the penalty pronounced by a jury.

As a result, Chessman said that he was composing a letter to Gov. Brown to discuss ways of removing himself as an issue from the great debate.

Chessman has said he so passionately hates capital punishment that his own death would be "a small price to pay" for its abolition.

Suicide Considered

His remarks about the letter suggested that he might ask Brown to exempt him from any proposal to eliminate the gas chamber, or that he might urge the Governor to go ahead and execute him.

Asked if he had ever considered suicide, he replied "yes, but I know now that this thing has got to go through to its resolution."

So the chance of Chessman living a long and healthy life seems remote, with the courts, the Legislature and the electorate all offering discouragement for the condemned man.

Yet, Californians have seen Chessman work eight "miracles" before.

And for both Chessman and the prisoner's friends, there always could be some faint, illogical hope however dismal his mathematical odds may seem.

We rate an animal's "smartness" on its power of reasoning, or how fast or how accurate he can figure out a problem with which he has never before had to deal. What he has been taught by constant repetition may be an ability to retain knowledge, but it is not an indication of intelligence. The dividing line between instinct and intelligence overlaps, making it difficult for even the most expert to determine where one leaves off and the other begins.

To all appearances, the chimp is up at the head of the class. Right alongside him is the common raccoon. Next in line seems to be some of the monkey-folk. And there, too, in the upper bracket is one whom we feel shouldn't be in the class at all, for he is from "the other side of the railroad tracks"—the common rat.

Holds His Own

Even though the teachers try to flunk him, he holds his place. His friend and relative, the mouse, gave up long ago and remains in the kindergarten. Given any kind of a chance, probably the porpoise would also rate pretty high in IQ. He's about as smart as they come. The shark, who lives in the same ocean, is little more than a nitwit.

In the world of birds, the diploma would probably go to the crow or some of the parrots. We never found a yardstick to measure a bird's intelligence.

But one thing is sure, humans do not have a corner on the intelligence business. Some animals perform acts and figure out problems that smack pretty loud of something else besides dumbness. (Released by the Register and Tribune Syndicate, 1960)

Small Worlds Around Us
By Lynn M. Watkins

Animals' I.Q. Ratings Hold Some Surprises

Some of us believe the family dog is one of the most intelligent of the "four-foots." This is understandable, for usually a dog is the one animal with whom we have been in close contact and we feel the knowledge of humankind sort of rubbed off on the dog. This human ego in the light of scientific knowledge has not been entirely established.

Even though our dog "can do everything but talk," he seems to rate lower in intelligence than some of the other animals. For some reason, the more intelligent animals seem to be those who have little or nothing to do with man.

Everyone agrees the cow is stupid, as is the sheep and the pig. We say the goose is "silly." On the other hand we compliment the owl for being wise, and the supposed smartness of the fox is a universal fallacy. Also, we say the rabbit is a "dumb bunny."

Fox Over-Rated

The sheep, opossum and the ocean shark seem to compete with one another as to which is the dumbest. The fox, a close relative of the dog, is terribly over-rated. He flunks some very simple questions on the examination. "Neither the fox, dog, hare, elephant nor the cat prove to be too smart when the chips are down.

We rate an animal's "smartness" on its power of reasoning, or how fast or how accurate he can figure out a problem with which he has never before had to deal. What he has been taught by constant repetition may be an ability to retain knowledge, but it is not an indication of intelligence. 40,000 Hear Billy Graham

Moshi, Tanganyika — (UPI) — Evangelist Billy Graham told 40,000 persons Sunday that "Christ belongs to Africa just as much as he belongs to any other continent."
