Engine Trouble Forced Changes In Ike's Plans

Ramey Air Force Base, Puerto Rico—Engine trouble forced minor changes in President Eisenhower's schedule several times during his South American tour, but Thursday was the first time he ran into difficulties while flying over a jungle in a jet.

An oil leak made it necessary for Col. William G. Draper, the presidential pilot, to shut down the No. 4 engine of Eisenhower's big 737 jetliner over the Brazilian jungle, an hour before arriving in Paramaribo, capital of Surinam Dutch Guiana.

Draper alerted air-rescue units in the area just in case, but he told newsmen later that he never doubted that the big jet would arrive safely in Paramaribo. Three engines provide more than enough power for safe operation of the plane.

In previous instances where minor malfunctions had affected the Eisenhower trip, the plane involved was the President's propeller-driven "Columbine." In no instance did engine trouble cause more than a brief delay.

Throughout the trip, the plane in which the President was traveling has been followed up by an identical plane and by a big Hercules turbo-prop transport, used mainly to carry spare parts but also having space for passengers.

All of the passengers from the President's plane transferred to the second 707, and six of the passengers who had been traveling in the second jet remained aboard. The others finished the trip in the Hercules.

The crippled 707 was left in Paramaribo for repairs.

Declines Widened In Early Trading

New York—UPI—Stocks in early trading today widened the declines which Thursday dropped rails to a 16-month low and brought talk in some quarters of an end of the bull market.

The decline, however, was orderly and on moderate volume and losses generally were limited to a point or less.

Rails, in particular, showed only small losses. Union Pacific, Southern Railway, Pennsylvania were unchanged.

Among industrials, losses in top quality issues ranged at the outside to only 2 points in Eastman Kodak, and there were small gains in Du Pont, General Electric, International Paper, Republic Steel, Texaco, and American Can.

Morse Cloture Petition Torn Up By Sen. Morton

Washington—UPI—The Senate set a record for around-the-clock sessions early today during a debate in which tempers flared briefly over a proposal to gag the Southern filibuster against civil rights legislation.

After the dispute was resolved with apparent good feelings all around, Senate Democratic Leader Lyndon B. Johnson said he would like to wait at least until next week before trying to choke off the talkathon with a rarely-used cloture petition.

At 1:38 a.m. (e.s.t.) the Senate had been in session day and night for 85 hours and 23 minutes, except for a 15-minute recess, equalling the record set during a 1954 filibuster on atomic energy. That debate was broken by a 24-minute recess.

Swastikas Daubed On WSU Buildings

Pullman, Wash.—UPI—Swastikas turned up on five Washington State University buildings this week, campus officials revealed Thursday.

Campus police said they appeared to be the work of "the same individual or group of individuals."

The swastikas were found Tuesday on the administration building, student book store, and services building; and on Wednesday, both inside and outside Todd and Fullmer halls, both classroom buildings.

President C. Clement French said he believed the swastikas had been painted by pranksters who were "old enough to know better."

He said he had found no evidence of any racial or religious prejudice at WSU.

Dissension Delays Filing of Charges Against Hoffa

Washington—UPI—Growing dissension among monitors named to supervise a Teamster's "housecleaning" has delayed filing of new corruption charges against Union President James R. Hoffa.

Informed sources said today the charges, prepared by monitor chairman Martin F. O'Donoghue, have been awaiting board approval for more than a week.

A heated clash Thursday among O'Donoghue and two other members of the "watchdog" group—Daniel Maher, and Lawrence Smith—further delayed a decision. Another board meeting was set for today.

Hot Verbal Exchange

Maher, who represents the Teamsters, and Smith, spokesman for rank-and-file rebels seeking to reform the union, were allied against the chairman in the hot verbal exchange. This broke up Thursday's session before the charges concerning Hoffa could be brought to a vote.

The dispute was reported to have involved charges and countercharges of bad faith or slowdowns in carrying out monitor duties.

The monitors are seeking Hoffa's removal as president of the nation's largest union and his expulsion from membership. They have accused him, with Maher dissenting, of mishandling union funds in connection with a Florida real estate deal. Hoffa's trial on these charges is set for late April.
