Prince's Title Concerns British

London—(UPI)—Now that Princess Margaret has finally found herself a husband, thank goodness, and Queen Elizabeth is happy with her baby prince, there is another little matter a lot of people would like to see taken care of at Buckingham palace.

Nearly 13 years after his marriage Prince Philip has still not been named prince consort.

Friends of the handsome husband of the Queen — and they are legion — feel he has earned this highest honor he can receive from his wife. He has been in their eyes a good husband, devoted father and valuable servant of the crown.

But though the Queen made him a prince of the United Kingdom three years ago—he was born a prince of Greece, she did not style him prince consort as had been expected. This was the title borne by Prince Albert, beloved husband of Victoria.

Nor is there any indication that the Queen plans to confer this distinction on Prince Philip in the near future.

Man, Animals Topic of Book; Review Given

Mrs. Wilma Krebs and Mrs. J. T. Ball presented the program for a meeting of Wednesday Study club last week.

Mrs. Ross A. Minnecci was a guest.

Mrs. Krebs reviewed "Codfish, Cats and Civilization," a book by Gary Webster. The author is a minister whose real name is Webb Black Garrison; he is president of McKendree college, Lebanon, Ill.

The book deals with the important contribution animals have made to civilization and the process of their domestication by man. Humans are dependent upon animals and can neither be well fed nor comfortable without them, according to the author.

It is thought that up to 8000 B.C. the dog was the only wild animal which had been tamed. Then gradually cattle, horses, pigs and cats were domesticated.

Only a very few of the many thousands of animal species can be tamed and there have been no new ones domesticated for 4000 years.

Man soon learned that animals had other uses besides meat for food and skins for clothing. Man learned to ride horseback.

Horses in Battle

Hernando Cortez, the Spanish conqueror of Mexico, used men on horses, in battle and with a small number terrified and routed vast numbers of the natives who had never seen men on horses before and thought that the man and horse were one.

The pig is the most numerous and important meat animal and has undergone less skeletal change than any other. The earliest settlers brought pigs to this country. The ancient Chinese rulers and Roman generals hunted wild boars. They were the fiercest animals to hunt and the author says Pope Leo X was a great devotee of this sport.

Mrs. Krebs stated that cats were domesticated some 5000 year ago and are essentially the same animal they were at that time. They revert back to the wild state more readily than any other animal.

In Egypt cats were raised by the thousands and were

Mrs. J. T. Ball read a letter from Fulvia, Pontius Pilate's wife, which was found in a monastery at Bruges where it had lain for centuries. Fulvia tells of her early life, her marriage to Pontius Pilate and describes him as a husband and father and says she was a very scholarly man. She tells how Jesus healed her son and daughter and of her efforts to save him from being crucified.
