CAREER DIPLIOMAT DIES

Westerly, R.I.–¾–Coert du Bois, 78, career diplomat who served on the Good Offices Committee of the U.N. Security Council trying to obtain a political settlement in Indonesia in 1948, died Sunday.

ALARMING FAD

St. Louis–(UPI)–St. Louis university has officially banned from the dormitories all "creatures which fly through the air, creep along the earth or bore into it." University officials said the reason was the alarming number of students keeping pet boa constrictors, alligators and basset hounds in their rooms.

The Medical Roundup

by Walter Alvarez

Emeritus Consultant in Medicine Mayo Clinic
Emeritus Professor of Medicine Mayo Clinic

Multiple Sclerosis

Every week I get letters from people who have been told that they have multiple sclerosis. Some have been much upset by a pessimistic doctor who threatened them with approaching disaster. I cannot get so pessimistic, because I know so many persons who have had the disease for 20 years and are still earning their living or being a good wife and mother. The neurologists at the Mayo Clinic once checked up on all of the patients with multiple sclerosis whom they knew in Rochester, Minesota, which was then a city of some 30,000 inhabitants. As I remember, they found that many of the patients had had the disease for 25 years and half of them were still getting around.

Dr. Alvarez

Unfortunately, we doctors do not know the cause of the disease. Whatever it is, it tends to "eat the insulation off" of nerves here and there in the body, and this causes numbness, and weakness of muscles. As yet, we know of no cure, and hence there is no sense that I can see in these people's traveling about the country looking for someone who will have a secret miracle-working medicine that no one else knows about.

As I have to keep telling dozens of correspondents every week, when a good doctor tells them that they have some rare disease for which no curative medicine is known, there is no sense in mortgaging the home and traveling about, hunting for someone who can work a cure. Today, knowledge about good drugs races around the world over night.

'Cure' Obviously Fake

If there is one thing I have had hammered into me all my life, it is that the man who claims to have a cure for some disease, but keeps this secret, is no doctor; he is a quack. Practically always, with the passage of time, it becomes obvious that his "cure" was a fake; and he had been obtaining large sums of money under false pretenses. Sometimes, it is probable that he was a simple old fellow who believed in his own foolishness, but that did not help the unhappy patients who had traveled far to consult him. Recently, I have heard of poor deluded people who have mortgaged their farm to go and consult a quack they have heard about in Germany or Switzerland. The farther away a quack is, the better people think he must be.

Every day I have to say sadly to the frantic mother of a child with leukemia or Hodgkin's disease, "I do not see any sense in your traveling to big medical centers, because the fine able cancer expert in your city is in constant touch with the great research centers."

Every month he receives abstracts of all articles on his subject published in the civilized world. If any medicine is discovered that looks promising he can soon get some of it. I hate to be so discouraging, but I hate, also, to see people wasting all of their savings.

Wall Street Chatter

New York –(UPI)– Wall Street is taking a hard look at the stock market's current behavior and wonders if it is witnessing the end of a long bull market, or merely another "correction."

The question of whether bear market forces are now at play arose on Thursday when the Dow-Jones rail average broke through its November lows to the lowest level in nearly 16 months.

Idea Disclaimed

Some technicians at first interpreted the Thursday break, which was paced all the way by the rail section, as a sign that a bear market holds sway. However, the consensus quickly disclaimed such an idea based solely on the Dow theory.

One said: "You'd have to look pretty hard to find that kind of technical theorist under the age of 55." However, whatever its merits, the Dow theory is considered a strong factor in the market because many people believe in it – or know that a great many others do.

A sampling of Wall Street feeling about the current market follows:

New Base Seen

William Kurtz of Paine, Webber, Jackson & Curtis believes the market is still attempting to consolidate a new base, and has not slipped into bear market phase. Prices will rise when the public decides to sell and institutions begin to buy, Kurtz points out.

PIONEER AVIATOR DIES

Temple City, Calif. – (UPI) – Roy Knabenshue, 87, pioneer aviator and onetime business manager for the Wright Brothers, died Sunday.

GET IOWA SEEDS

Moscow –(UPI)– The scientific research forestry station near Sochi reported today it received a gift of seeds for 26 types of summer flowers from farmer Rosewell Garst, Iowa host of Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev last Sept. 23. The station said the gift was in return for seeds for trees and bushes given Garst during his visit to the station last spring.

BRANDY FOR BLOOD

New York–(UPI)–The Actors' Fund Blood Bank announced that anyone showing up to give a pint of blood at the Astor Hotel this morning would receive a free glass of brandy – afterwards.
