

Medical Patient—Mrs. Grace Slusman, 200 Medford Heights, is a medical patient at Sacred Heart hospital.

Permit Issued—The city has issued Jackson county a building permit to construct a $73,061 exhibit building at the county fairgrounds.

Tools Missing—Charles Arthur O'Neil, superintendent on the construction job at the Rogue Valley Manor, told city police Wednesday that more than $1,700 worth of assorted tools, including a surveyors transit, valued at $450, have been taken from the construction site on Barneburg hill during the past eight months.

Locals

Tonsillectomy—Richard Reynolds, 13-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Richard C. Reynolds, Jacksonville, underwent a tonsillectomy at Medford Osteopathic hospital Thursday.

Hubcaps Taken—Mrs. Janet Turner, 2349 Highway 66, Ashland, notified sheriff's deputies Wednesday that four hubcaps were taken from her car sometime during the night.

Snow Man—Anton Herman, Hayes, Kan., father of Mrs. Olinda Igo, 1346 Dixie lane, was pictured in the Hayes newspaper recently after he sculptured a 10-foot snow man in his front yard following a heavy snowfall. The giant snowman had an 89-inch waist.

To Washington—D. J. Bolton left yesterday for Washington, D.C., for the director's meeting of the National Rifle association. He is beginning his fourth three-year term on the board. Congressman Charles O. Porter will be his guest at the annual NRA banquet. Bolton, owner of the Medford Laboratories, will conduct business with virus serum control laboratories while in Washington.

Will the Swallows Come Back to Capistrano on St. Joseph's Day?

By J. A. ST. AMANT
San Juan, Capistrano, Calif. — It's swallow time at San Juan Capistrano and the annual spring madness about the "Miracle of the Swallows" is in the air.

The faithful feathered creatures are due back at their historic mission tomorrow on St. Joseph's Day but there are few people left who believe their return has any religious significance.

The pretty legend has been pretty well blasted by science. The swallows do come north in the spring—but so do a lot of other migratory birds such as geese and ducks.

Other Places, Too
The swallows come north not only to the mission here but also to old barns and out-buildings and to the Episcopal Church at San Clemente a few miles to the south.

The swallow legend became famous in the mid-1930s on the wings of a song—"When the Swallows Come Back to Capistrano." But the good Franciscan padres who run the mission have never attached any religious significance to their return.

Some old settlers of Spanish-Mexican descent look upon the annual migration as part of the Feast of St. Joseph, but they won't get any backing from the Catholic Church. No Religious Implications
Msgr. Vincent Lloyd-Russell, the mission pastor, says "There's nothing religious about the migration. It just happens that it usually coincides with St. Joseph's Day."

Any swallows arriving earlier than the feast day are called "scouts" by the old-timers. So many scouts arrived in 1947, that most everyone had to admit the swallows were early—four days early.

Two elements may have been factors in establishing and perpetuating the legend—the Franciscan Order was founded by St. Francis of Assisi, the patron of the birds and the feast, and the birthday of Msgr. S. John O'Sullivan, longtime pastor who helped restore the mission grounds, fell on St. Joseph's Day.

Strictly Their Business
A member of the Franciscan Order, Rev. Edgar Holden of the St. Anthony—On Hudson Seminary in New York created some consternation among old-timers last year when he said in a speech, "it might be true that these little creatures return to Capistrano each year on March 19. If so, it is strictly their business. But the veiled implication that their scheduled appearance somehow bolsters the truth of Catholicism is—in the quaint metric of the feathered folk—strictly for the birds."

The local Chamber of Commerce does nothing to dispell the legend of the swallows' supposedly exact schedule. This year the chamber incurred the displeasure of the padres by scheduling its "Fiesta De Las Golondrinas" on St. Joseph's Day rather than in mid-summer as in past years. This includes a horse parade with a few movie stars and other trimmings.

Too Commercial
The padres feel this is just a bit too commercial. They confine their activities to a pageant on the mission grounds and special masses for the saint's day. Ted Hodges, a local newspaperman and observer of the swallows for 25 years, takes the non-religious view of the migration.

"I've never seen a March 19 but that we've had at least a few swallows although storms and other weather changes affect their arrival time," he says. "This is a biological thing—these birds want to get rid of their eggs and they were born. It's as simple as that."

Paul Arbisio who was born here and collects the 50 cents admission fee to the mission, hints rather guardedly at religious overtones. Departure Sequel Jinked
"I've been watching the swallows come back for about 60 years," he says, "and most of the time, most of them come back right on St. Joseph's Day."

The legend of the swallows used to have a sequel—their departure supposedly on San Juan's Day, Oct. 23. But this has been jinked and science again can be blamed. The swallows are insect-eaters and because of the effectiveness of modern insecticides, their food supply runs out earlier. They sometimes leave the mission and surroundings as early as July, faithless creatures bent on finding happier hunting grounds to fill their gutlets.
