What Is The Law?

This column is prepared as a public service by the College of Law, Willamette University, Salem, to explain basic legal principles, not to provide legal advice. The reader is cautioned not to apply these cases to his own problems without an attorney's advice, for differing facts may change the outcome.

In Oregon, A Divorced Person Cannot Marry For Six Months
Sarah had just been granted her divorce, in the circuit court of an Oregon county. The presiding judge said to her: "Under the law of Oregon you may not remarry within six months of the date of your divorce, unless the man you marry is the man you have divorced."

Sarah's attorney shook hands with her and said to her: "Now remember, you are not to get married for six months."

Accepted Proposal
Two months later Sarah fell for Sam Brown. He felt the same way about her and promptly asked her to marry him. Sarah accepted, and the happy couple drove to another state to get married as quickly as possible. Sarah remembered what the judge and her attorney had told her, but she said to herself: "Nobody will ever know the difference. I don't dare wait. I haven't any reason to hope Sam would wait for me for four months, and it surely can't make any real difference anyway. Once we're married, we're married, and nobody can do anything about it then." So they got a marriage license and were married in the next state.

But a few months later Sam was killed in an auto accident. The new Mrs. Brown assumed that she has some sort of interest in Sam's property as his widow. Is she correct in her assumption?

No. Sarah was never legally married to Sam. The Oregon Supreme Court has held on several occasions that a marriage entered into by a person divorced by an Oregon Court within six months after the divorce is absolutely void.

No Divorce Rights
The statute provides that neither party to a decree of divorce or annulment shall be capable of contracting marriage with a third person until the expiration of six months from the date of the decree or, if an appeal is made, until the suit is determined on appeal, whichever is later. If either party does marry, he is as liable as if the divorce had not been given. A person who does so marries gains none of the legal rights incident to marriage and is undoubtedly guilty of illicit cohabitation and therefore subject to imprisonment in the county jail and a fine.

It is true that the state leg-

Break Called Correction in First Stage of Bull Market

By ELMER C. WALZER
UPI Financial Editor
New York—UPI—Not long ago, the followers of chart theory spotted what they called a bear market signal which made many a person quake with fear.

A bear market—a declining stock market—could slow up the economy and be the forerunner of a recession. Bear markets have been that often in the past.

Bull markets—rising markets—operate in reverse. They stimulate the economy. They reflect confidence—good things ahead.

Now who is to say that the January-March stock market break instead of being the beginning of a bear market was a correction of the first stage of a bull market—a bull market that started in Oct., 1957, with Dow-Jones industrial average at 420?

William Kurtz is the man. He is an analyst for the stock exchange firm of Paine, Webber, Jackson & Curtis.

Kurtz says this bull market rose from 420 in Oct., 1957, to a peak of 685 in January of this year.

Advance May Be Postponed
"This level," he says, "was the high-water mark of the current bull market and has been corrected by an adjustment that retraced one-third of the advance.

"In view of the swiftness of the recent decline in equity prices, a sustained advance may not get under way immediately.

"It may take as much as a year of trading range fluctuations to consolidate the steep advance of 1958-1959 before one can reasonably expect another broad scale uptrend that is characteristic of the second stage of a bull market.

"However, it is possible that the recent intra-day lows of around 597 in the Dow-Jones industrial average represent the bottom of the expected trading range or, if penetrated, additional selling might not carry prices far below that level."

Kurtz believes it would be peculiar if after only three and a half years, since the April, 1956, peak in the industrials, we unexpectedly stumbled into another bear market.

"This," he says, "would be particularly surprising in view of the good economic outlook anticipated for the next 12 months.

"Furthermore, the interval between bull market peaks has averaged nine years over a span of 70 years of stock market history."

He is opposed to the belief held by many chartists that a bull market contains three stages. He holds bull and bear markets each have only two stages.

"It would appear," Kurtz says, "that the 'three stage' approach rests on uncertain statistical evidence and the Dow theory breaks down in bear markets that are moderate in amplitude and short in duration.

"When the Dow theory signals a bear market, stock prices are apt to be near their lows under the classical Dow theory rules operating in present markets."

He finds that the average retracements of a bull market's initial advance is 33 per cent. The recent January-March decline works out at 33 per cent of the 266 point rise since Oct., 1957.

On that basis, he holds, stock prices could be at the low end of their trading range for 1960, but an immediate broad-range advance carrying the industrials to new highs doesn't seem likely, he adds.

He believes stock prices must digest the prior sharp advance over a period of time, as well as retrace a certain number of points gained.

"However, when this consolidation period ends, will the bull market enter its second stage, perhaps carrying the Dow-Jones industrial average to a level exceeding one thousand by 1965," he asks.
