Prison Release Finally Comes For Marty Dalton

Cranston, R.I.—UPI—Horse-drawn carriages were tied to the wooden hitch rails along the dusty streets. Ladies held their long, bustled skirts an inch above the boardwalks as they hurried on their way. Lunch was free in the saloons. William McKinley was President of the United States.

This was the world of Martin Dalton, the world he left behind forever in 1897 when the gray gates of Rhode Island State Prison closed behind him. Death finally paroled the 91-year-old lifer Wednesday.

Given Ride 'Outside' When Marty Dalton had an official chance for freedom in 1930 after serving 33 years for the slaying of a New York businessman, he first asked for a ride "outside." The prison officials agreed. For two hours he rode past the spots he and Yankee Dan Sullivan once toured in their rather wild youth.

Cars clogged the highways, the old buildings were gone, the men and women were strangely dressed. Marty's family in Fall River, Mass., was dead; he had no friends, no money, no job, and no home. The story goes that Marty Dalton wept.

Asked To Return Prison was Dalton's only home and so he asked to be returned. From that day on, he went no further from the prison than a small garden patch he maintained just outside the walls. No other convict in Rhode Island history ever spent no long behind bars.

Prison officials said Dalton was well behaved. As he grew older the only things that mattered to him were tobacco for his pipe, food and a place to sleep. He received no mail in the past 31 years and his last visitor was in 1898.

Mind Years Away He was pleasant with guards and fellow inmates but frequently forgot that someone was talking to him. His mind often seemed years away, according to officials.

Dalton's troubles began in 1892 when he and Yankee Dan, his best friend, spotted Anthony S. Haswell, 66, a retired New York businessman flashing a bankroll in an East Providence saloon. They assaulted and robbed Haswell, who died soon afterward.

Yankee Dan was captured and sent to prison, where he died years ago, but Dalton escaped and fled to Germany. For an unknown reason he returned to his country three years later and was captured in Atlanta, Ga., where he was known as George Morgan, a prize fight manager.

Portland Garden Writer Succumbs

Portland—UPI—Funeral arrangements were being made today for Drew Bennett Sherrard, nationally-known garden writer, who died Tuesday at the age of 76.

Mrs. Sherrard was to have been honored next month as a Woman of Achievement by Theta Sigma Phi, national professional journalism honorary for women.

Mrs. Sherrard was credited with being the founder of the rock garden in the Pacific Northwest. Survivors include her daughter, Margaret S. Lynch, Oswego, and a son, Thomas D. Sherrard, Chicago.

New York—UPI—John T. Hackett, 60, a former newspaper and magazine editorial writer, died Wednesday.
