Molasses Cupcakes Treat for Easter

Here is a traditional recipe for molasses cupcakes loved by children in this country since the Dutch settled New Amsterdam and started bringing up their children on dishes made with 'long sweetening' - golden molasses.

In those days there were meat pies, baked with molasses, nasturtium, apple-mint and tansy; hams, glazed like jewels with pomegranate seeds, molasses and bits of orange peel. There were molasses tea and molasses milk and molasses confections for special treats - little decorated cakes and sweet, tawny ginger cookies.

Molasses is a delicious natural sweetener and one of our most important sources of usable iron. The cupcakes are simple to make and such fun to decorate that children enjoy making them for their own parties and after-school snacks. For Easter, don't forget the jelly beans!

For molasses cupcakes use 1 1/3 cups prepared biscuit mix, 1/2 cup sugar, 3 table-spoons soft butter, 1 egg, 1/2 cup milk, 1/4 cup light molasses.

Combine all ingredients; beat for 1 minute at medium speed on electric mixer. Spoon into paper baking cups placed in muffin pan. Bake in moderate oven (350 degrees F.) 12 to 15 minutes. Makes 1 dozen cup cakes.

For Easter, decorate each cup cake with a center of vanilla frosting or whipped cream, border with shredded coconut, and top with a few jelly beans.

Big Game Hunter Speaks For Ashland Dinner Club

The adventure and excitement of big game hunting in Alaska was described Monday night for Siskiyou Knife and Fork club's April meeting, held at the Elk's dining room. Speaker was John S. Day, Medford, who has traveled and hunted in many parts of the world.

Mr. Day showed movies which he had taken in the region of Kotzebue, Alaska, which hunters use as a base while searching for polar bear from light planes. When the bear are sighted, the planes are landed on the Arctic ice, and the hunt continued on foot.

The speaker showed pictures of two polar bear shot by him, one being a mammoth creature which it was estimated would have measured some 11 1/2 feet "standing" upright; the weight was estimated at about 1600 pounds.

Labeling Law Is Explained; Wash Tags New

Chicago - You can't tell the players without a program, is the huckster's hawk at the ballgame.

And with synthetics that look like cotton, silk and wool; and cotton, silk, and wool taking on the same ease-of-care characteristics as synthetics, you can't tell the fabric of a garment without reading the label.

Just to be sure that every fabric is properly identified for the wary shopper, the federal government passed the Textile Fiber Product Identification act. This law, already in effect, requires all fibers used in clothing to be labeled according to predominance of weight, such as 75 per cent Dacron, 25 per cent cotton.

While this law does not require laundering and cleaning instructions, many manufacturers are including such recommendations on hang-tags to assure top performance by their products.

In addition, the American Standards association has established an "all fiber textile standard." This requires a permanent, sewn in label on every garment or textile article conforming to established standards, giving washing directions by a color code.

Washable at 160 degrees F., with bleach, will carry a purple label; washable at 160 degrees F., without bleach, will be green; washable at 120 degrees F., without bleach, will be blue; and washable at 105 degrees F., without bleach, will carry a yellow label.

To learn how to launder those garments whose hang-tags do not carry washing instructions, the American Home Laundry Manufacturers' Association, 20 North Wacker drive, Chicago 6, Ill., offers a free booklet on "How to Launder Wash and Wear."

Dinning at Dizzy Heights Gaining in Popularity

San Francisco long has had its "Top of the Mark, New York its Rainbow Room and Paris its Eiffel Tower with spectacular views of the surrounding city.

Now, the nation which made world famous the custom of eating in a cellar, the rathskeller, also has produced a restaurant among the highest in the world. It occupies two glass-enclosed floors of a four-story circular "basket," setting like a bump on a skinny, white concrete shaft 408 feet high in Stuttgart's television tower. The tower itself reaches to 634 feet. One other floor of the basket is for a kitchen and food preparation section designed especially for the circular area, the other, for offices, television equipment and technical staff.

The tower itself, owned by the South German Broadcasting company, sits in a forested area on a hill high above the city and is visible on good days at least 50 miles away. Restaurant Betriebs Fernsehturn was unique in Europe when it first was opened almost five years ago, said Max Schober, 50, the head waiter whose family for three generations has been in the restaurant business.

Today, several other European cities are copying. Moscow plans a similar tower and dining spot-the tower, twice as high as Stuttgart's-and has invited Dr. Fritz Elionhardt, the Stuttgart architect-engineer who designed the original, to Moscow for consultation.

Schober told me that Stuttgart is in the heart of Germany's sauerkraut belt, where its pyramid-shaped cabbages are grown and shipped to various parts of the world. International Clientele But the day I dined there with a group of 20 persons on a "get-acquainted" tour of Germany, nearest thing we had to sauerkraut was a cabbage salad with a cream dressing "modern krautsalat," the menu read. With it went a rich chicken soup, a stuffed veal roll, and ice cream with a hot chocolate sauce.

Schober explained that Walter Frohne, 24, head chef, tried to plan a varied menu to please the restaurant's international clientele.

The tower annually draws one million visitors, and Schober said that the restaurant's guest list had included Russian diplomats, American millionaires, and just plain folks from all parts of the world.
