

Southern Politicos Planning Strategy For 1960 Elections

Washington - Politicians in nine Southern states are planning a balance-of-power strategy for use in the 1960 Presidential election.

Rather than back a third party, which would be "futile" and "ineffective", Southern conservatives hope for a close vote for President - within the 104 electoral votes they hope to control out of a national total of 537. Should such a close election occur, the Southern figure they could withhold their votes, throw the election into the hands of Representatives and force important policy concessions out of the candidates whose fate they would then control.

The key phrase for Southerners has turned from "third party" to "independent electors". State laws permit independent electors to be chosen in five Southern states - Alabama, Arkansas, Georgia, Mississippi and South Carolina.

Vote for Electors

In a Presidential election, you vote, not for the Presidential candidate, but for electors who, by tradition, are committed to vote for the candidate of their party. The laws of those five Southern states say that the electors need not feel morally committed.

In four other Southern states - Louisiana, Tennessee, Texas and Virginia - electors must be associated with a Presidential candidate but the law specifically permits state committees to support candidates other than those of the national committees. Thus, in effect, these states, too, can abandon a major party candidate.

Altogether these Southern states have 104 electoral votes - an ample number to prevent either candidate from getting a clear majority, if the election is at all close.

Almost Happened

In 1948, for example, this situation almost developed. States Rights party candidate Strom Thurmond of South Carolina carried Alabama, Louisiana, Mississippi and South Carolina - 38 electoral votes, plus one States Right vote from Tennessee. The election was so close in the rest of the country that, if a mere 18,000 Democratic votes in California and 7,000 Democratic votes in Ohio had been Republican, neither GOP candidate Thomas E. Dewey or Democratic candidate Harry S. Truman would have received a majority of electoral votes and the election would have been thrown into the House of Representatives.

The Constitution provides that, if neither Presidential candidate receives a majority of the electoral votes, the House must "immediately" choose from the candidates having the highest number of electoral votes, not exceeding three men. Each state has one vote in the House and a ma-

Low, Absent Acidity Declared To Be Warning of Cancer

Editor's note: This is the second of three articles on cancer prevention, detection and treatment written by Dr. Warren H. Cole, president of the American Cancer Society.

By DR. WARREN H. COLE
President
American Cancer Society
Written for United Press International

A man called his physician and said, "That ulcer's acting up."

"Better come in," said the doctor, "I want to see if anything's brewing."

"You mean cancer? You don't get cancer with an ulcer?" the patient said indignantly.

"That depends on the ulcer." The doctor went on to explain that a gastric ulcer can lead to or conceal a cancer. But not duodenal ulcer which is accompanied by acidity.

Low or absent acidity, a condition we call achlorhydria, is characteristic of gastric ulcer - and a warning of cancer. More than 50 per cent of patients with gastric cancer have an absence of acid, and many more have diminished acidity.

Many Too Late

If we could measure the acidity of large numbers of people we could identify those who are high risks for stomach cancer, diagnose the disease earlier, save many lives, and ease the painful frustration of treating stomach cancer!

So many patients reach us too late. Cancer is rarely an overt enemy, but stomach cancer strikes from total ambush. There are months of silent growth before symptoms appear, and trivial symptoms of "indigestion" are all too often ignored for another six months, or longer.

So help your doctor keep alert for the signs of gastric ulcer, achlorhydria and any other condition that has symptomatic kinship with cancer.

For example, there's pernicious anemia. Patients with pernicious anemia, in which achlorhydria is so prevalent, develop cancer three times as often as normal people in the same age group. And it can also be a factor in gastric ulcer.

And polyps. These small benign tumors usually occur in the lower third of the stomach - and so do most stomach cancers. And to tie it all together, stomach polyps often are associated with a low or absent acid secretion. They do not account for many cancers, but a small percentage are malignant when first detected, and others undergo malignant change. It is sound cancer prevention to eliminate them.

This is a must when polyps are found in the colon, for here they are often precancerous. They arise in and hang from the lining of the large intestine or rectum, they may be single or multiple, sometimes many are found along the length of the colon. The condition is called polyposis and it can be inherited.

Cancer itself is not inherited. But polyposis isn't cancer, and examination of the lower intestinal tract for polyps is a wise precaution for anyone who has had a parent or grandparent affected by cancer of the rectum or colon.

Ulcerative Colitis

Another colon abnormality that must be promptly treated and watched is ulcerative colitis, because the end-stage of this condition is frequently malignant. The more common mucous colitis is not precancerous.

But what exactly do we mean by that sometimes misunderstood word "pre-cancerous"? It describes an abnormal state of a tissue, usually localized, which tends to become malignant. It is a forerunner rather than a cause. And a precancerous condition doesn't necessarily become

SOCFTA Group to Meet April 18

The next meeting of the public relations committee of the Southern Oregon Conservation and Tree Farm association will be held in Grants Pass, April 18, starting at 7 a.m., according to Al Smith, Medford Corporation, chairman.

Bob Kello, plant manager, Southern Oregon Plywood, and Jack Sim, Bate Lumber company, are in charge of arrangements of the special meeting, Smith said, and have planned to invite representatives of the public agencies and Josephine county officials as well as others who have a stake in the economic health of the lumber industry.

Smith noted that the meeting was originally scheduled for April 11 but had been changed to the later date to allow more time to plan the program and issue invitations to the interested persons. Members of the association, other than committee members, are also invited to attend, Smith said.

Power Project in Tillamook Sought

Washington - (UP) - The Federal Power Commission said Monday the Tillamook, Ore., People's Utility District has asked for a preliminary permit for a hydro-electric project to be built on the Trask river in Tillamook county.

The project calls for a 150 foot dam to create a reservoir with a storage capacity of 120,000 acre feet of water and a powerhouse with an installed capacity of 30,000 kilowatts. No cost estimate was announced.

A re-regulating dam and powerhouse with capacity of 5,000 kilowatts would be built upstream.

Ashland Mortuary Is Bought by Gordon Hays

Ashland - Mr. and Mrs. Gordon C. Hays yesterday announced purchase of the Ashland mortuary from Conger-Morris Funeral home, Medford.

Hays, a former assistant manager for Conger-Morris, had managed the Ashland mortuary for the past five years. A native of Iowa, he has lived in the valley since 1948.

Sexton Radio Gets High Gain Antenna

Installation of a new high gain antenna for the Sexton radio system was announced recently by Dale Prentice, secretary-manager of the Southern Oregon Conservation and Tree Farm association.

The new antenna, similar to the one installed on the Roxy radio system last fall, is currently being tested, Prentice said.

The main reason for installing the new antenna is to increase the fringe area reception, he remarked. Since logging operations are moving further away from populated areas, it becomes increasingly vital they maintain good radio communication with the base station for routing operational messages as well as providing fast response to emergency messages. Testing of the new antenna will be completed in the near future, Prentice said.
