GRANDMOTHER BOOKED—Mrs. Florence Pearl Nuttall, 50-year-old Compton, Calif., grandmother, is booked on a charge of "corporal punishment"—accused of jabbing two of her six grandchildren with a two-inch needle and putting pepper and a matchstick into their eyes. Mrs. Nuttall was accused by her son and daughter-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Douglas E. Nuttall, who told deputies that their boys, Anthony, 5, and Jeffrey, 20 months, had been "tortured" while the grandmother was baby sitting for them. —(UPI Telephoto)

Small Worlds Around Us

The Little Snowflakes Perplex Scientists
 The cold water from the melting snow seeps down into the litter of the forest floor and the unbelievable happens—thousands, sometimes millions of tiny, long-legged insects escape from their tiny crypts; struggle up out of the ground, and begin what seems like a joyous dance on the snowbanks.

Scorpionflies, or what are more commonly called snowflakes, perplex all these observant folks who look with unbelieving eyes at these tiny insects with the cold feet and unchapped wrists, who seemingly enjoy gambling on the crest of snowbanks.

They resemble grasshoppers in general bodily shape, although much smaller, with long slender legs and the ability to hop. Many of them live the year around in the dead leaves and debris of the forest floor, but seem to become nervously excited or active in the winter.

Considered flightless insects, some of the males of some species, of which there are about a dozen kinds in the United States, have bedraggled looking wings that startlingly resemble a worn-out shaving brush, reduced to a tiny size.

It is believed the adult scorpionfly, or snowflake, feeds on dead vegetable matter, or perhaps partly on other insects, whose bodies are decayed, or partly so. These strange little creatures, who happily tolerate cold feet and almost seem to live always in dampness without ever getting wet.

Usually they are present on snowfields during the entire winter but become increasingly abundant on warm days. If the sun melts a thin film of the top snow, the snowflakes begin their everlasting hopping.

Maybe that's why they jump so readily, because they are naturally hoppers; little skiers with built-in skis, who don't go indoors for a warm fire when the day is done, but who continue their snow playing throughout the entire night; maybe so they can be at it early the next morning.

Individually, looked at from a close range, this little snow hopper has a very long face; and for a very good reason, for actually they are a very primitive order of insects. Their ancestors lived, probably in snowbanks, many millions of years ago.

Tolerance for Weather
 Perhaps the order has survived mainly because of their tolerance for any kind of weather, for they do all right for themselves even in the summertime.

They don't know it, probably wouldn't care if they did, but they are on the biological teeterboard: Neither they, nor any of the rest of us know for sure whether they are on the way up, or down. We don't know for sure how they got on the see-saw in the first place, or whether they are going forward, moving slowly backward, or just standing still.

No wonder they seem so perplexed: even the scientist do.
