

Aspirin Cleared Of All Blame in Peptic Ulcer Cases

London, (Science Service)—Reports that aspirin causes bleeding of the stomach and intestine, peptic ulcers and anemia have been greatly exaggerated.

For 22 years British medical journals have printed the pros and cons of whether aspirin, a frequent, regular medication in illnesses such as rheumatoid arthritis, could eventually cause the patient to develop a stomach or intestinal condition.

In an attempt to settle the controversy, Dr. F. D. Bargar and J. J. R. Duthie of Northern General Hospital, Edinburgh, Scotland, studied 244 rheumatoid arthritis patients, most of whom were taking regular doses of aspirin.

Significant Increase
During a six-year period, the group showed a significant increase in hemoglobin level, which drops in cases of anemia, bleeding and ulcer. The amount of increase was about the same as for a smaller group not on regular aspirin, the researchers reported here in the British Medical Journal.

Only three patients (1.2) developed evidence of peptic ulcer while on aspirin. This is about the same incidence of peptic ulcer as in the general population, indicating these few patients might have developed peptic ulcers whether they had taken aspirin or not.

Synthetic Hormones Pack a Big Punch

London—(Science Service)—Sex hormones that pack a bigger punch than those brewed by nature have been synthesized by a team of Dutch and Swedish scientists.

By chancing atoms on the outside edges, rather than in the center, of a known steroid hormone molecule, the scientists were able to produce substances 5 to 25 times as active as progesterone, a female sex hormone that prepares the uterus for pregnancy. In clinical trials there were no adverse side effects.

A third artificial substance related to testosterone, a male sex hormone, showed no similar activity, and a fourth substance acted against the steroids that produce maleness.

Details of the research were reported here in the current issue of the British scientific journal, Nature. The researchers were E. H. Reerink, H. F. L. Scholer, P. Westerhof of the Philips-Duphar N. V. laboratories, Weesp, Holland; A. Querido and A. A. H. Kassehaar of the University of Leyden, Holland; and E. Diezfasusy and K. C. Tillingier of Karolinska hospital, Stockholm, Sweden.

Sen. Morse Sees Chance To Win

Eugene—(UP)—Sen. Wayne Morse said Wednesday he believed he had "a very good chance" to win the Democratic presidential nomination if the convention was deadlocked.

Morse, continuing a campaign tour of the state, added in an interview that it appeared to him the convention was likely to be deadlocked. He said he believed no one could get enough votes to be nominated for the first several ballots.

He branded as "a complete falsehood" opinions by some members of his party that he had something to do with the petition campaign to put his name on the Oregon primary ballot.

Morse said he had tried to stop the campaign but when he saw it was continuing he decided to make a fight for the nomination.

Right Address, But It Wasn't a House

Baton Rouge, La.—(UP)—Police in Columbia, S.C., replied promptly when Baton Rouge officers asked them to hold a suspect, but it will be some time before the wanted man is turned over to the Louisiana officers.

"Have information that Donald Ray Borders resides at 1515 Griss st., your city," the Baton Rouge police wired. "Please detain. Warrant to follow."

Columbia police confirmed Borders lived there "and will do so for some time." The address was that of the South Carolina State penitentiary, where Borders is serving from six to 10 years.
