

In the Days News
By FRANK JENKINS

From Charlottesville, Virginia:
Adlai Stevenson, despite his denials, looks a good deal like someone running for President. He insisted in New York he is not a candidate for the Democratic nomination, does not expect to get it and has no hopes that he will be chosen. But here in Charlottesville he is flashing his best smile, shaking a lot of hands and preparing to take a slap at the Republicans.

Officially, he is here to be the featured speaker at the commemoration of the founding of the University of Virginia by Thomas Jefferson, whose 217th birthday is also being celebrated. In this, his first speech since his return from South America, he will reflect on the PARTY IDEALS OF JEFFERSON, tear into the GOP and call for a Democratic victory in November.

HMMMMMM.
One can't help wondering if Adlai approves Jefferson's belief that THAT GOVERNMENT IS BEST WHICH GOVERNS LEAST and will pledge himself to carry it out if he is nominated and elected President.

If so, I might be tempted to vote for him.

MORE about politics:
In this campaign year, most of the candidates presently looming on the horizon appear to be pretty well heeled.

SENATOR Kennedy, who at the moment looks like the Democratic front runner, modestly admits that he is worth about a million, maybe only $900,000. At least, his father gave him a million dollar trust fund when he was only nine years old.

Senator Lyndon Johnson rates his financial condition as "average." He thinks if he sold out today he could cash in for around $200,000. But his wife is worth quite a lot more—maybe as much as a million.

Senator Stuart Symington, who can't be laughed off as a candidate for the Democratic nomination, regards himself as comfortably fixed. When he first went into government, he sold out his holdings in one concern that might have been a contender for government contracts for a million dollars. Mrs. Symington is independently wealthy. She and her husband have pooled their holdings in a trust.

On the Republican side, only Nelson Rockefeller shares mention as a Presidential possibility with Mr. Nixon. He certainly will never need to worry about where his next meal will come from.

Mr. Stevenson, who says he doesn't expect to get a third nomination, but appears, like Barkis, to "be willin'," is estimated by his friends to be worth about a half million.

AMONG the presently leading hopefuls, that leaves only Vice-President Nixon and Senator Humphrey in the class of moderately poor folks.

Mr. Nixon started with nothing and worked his way through college. After 13 years of public life, he has a $35,000 equity in a $75,000 house, a 1955 car, some term insurance and some savings accounts and no stocks or bonds.

Mr. Humphrey estimates his wealth as "about that of the average for a small town druggist." He has in the neighborhood of $8,000 in savings, maybe $4,000 in mutual securities and owns a paid-for home in Washington but owes $17,000 on his home in Minnesota.

ALL in all, it looks like the log cabin tradition, which was a long-time must in our politics, is on its way out.

Man Wanted in Yakima Arrested

Santa Cruz, Calif.—An ex-convict wanted in Yakima, Wash., for kidnap, assault and auto theft, was captured near here Wednesday by the California Highway Patrol.

Richard Bowman, 39, was arrested without resistance at Aptos, Calif., a beach community outside Santa Cruz. He was in an auto seized forcibly in Yakima last Sunday from an auto dealer, according to police. Timothy Hazel, 18, son of the dealer, was severely beaten and is reported still in critical condition.

Bowman has spent 15 years in prisons in Ohio, Oregon, California and Texas on auto and bad check convictions. He was also wanted by Santa Cruz county sheriff's office on another bad check charge.
