

Government Camp Crash Hurts Three

Government Camp—(UPI)—A two-car accident seven miles east of Government Camp resulted in the hospitalization of a Seattle family of three Wednesday night.

Hospitalized were Walter Hansen, his wife and their infant daughter. None was reported in serious condition.

Hansen's late-model sedan was involved in a collision on the slick highway with a truck driven by Melvin O'Day, of Bend, state police said.

O'Day was unhurt. The Hansen car had to be towed away.

Poultry Vaccine Restriction Lifted

Salem—(UPI)—Restrictions on the use by Oregon poultrymen of live virus infectious bronchitis vaccine have been removed by the State Agriculture Department.

The Department also has amended its regulations on dairy products plants. Both orders are effective retroactively to April 13.

Under the vaccine order, written approval from the Department is no longer necessary for use or sale of the vaccine. Changes in dairy plant orders are in line with recent amendments to the fluid milk code.

Grange News

Central Point Grange

"The Testing Time," a recording of Paul Harvey, was the only number on the Good Friday program presented by the lecturer, Mrs. Homer Jeffries for Central Point Grange April 15.

Highlights of the business session included committee reports on agriculture and legislation. The master, Benton Boyce, asked a committee to study the school reorganization bill and report by next meeting. HEC chairman, Mrs. O. T. Wilson, reported the rummage sale results, and announced the next club meeting will be with Mrs. Chester Wendt April 27. Mrs. Charles Jantzer had an exhibit of desert rocks and plants on the display table.

Serving committee for the evening included Mr. and Mrs. Marshall Weidman, Mr. and Mrs. Foote, and Benton Boyce.

nist from the San Diego Natural History Museum, reports that elephant seals have been seen chewing tobacco at one of their haunts on the coast of Baja California, Mexico.

Moran said the seals on Guadalupe Island pick and chew the leaves of the Indian tobacco plant, which is a common weed on the Baja California coast.

Dr. Arthur L. Kelly, a student of mammals at Scripps Institution of Oceanography in La Jolla, said the remains of the plant, which contains nicotine, often are found in stomachs of the elephant seal. Kelly said elephant seals, which grow as long as 20 feet and can reach a weight of eight tons, may be bored or frustrated when they eat the plants.

"Animals often tear at plants when their normal habits are interfered with," he explained. "This is called 'displacement activity.'"

"If a sea gull is frustrated in his breeding hunch, for example, he will often tear at the turf with his beak," Kelly said.

Dr. Moran said the Indian tobacco plant which the elephant seals like is relatively new to Guadalupe Island and probably didn't start growing there until between 1932 and 1948. It is widespread on the mainland of Baja California. He said goats, the largest land animals in the area, won't eat it.

College Students Interview Official At Model UN Event

Ashland—An interview with George Cabot-Lodge, assistant secretary of labor in international relations, highlighted the recent trip by members of the Southern Oregon college

International Relations club to the Model United Nations in Berkeley, Calif.

Dr. Clifford Miller, advisor of the IRC, and Bill Black, press representative, interviewed the sub-cabinet member after his keynote address to the general assembly of the mock UN.

Asked what he considered the most vital subjects that should be taught in American schools, Cabot-Lodge said, "It is most important that we, as Americans, understand and know fully the significance of labor relations and labor organizations in the other countries of the world, with particular emphasis on those of the so-called underdeveloped areas."

American Representative

Cabot-Lodge is the American representative to the International Labor Organization which meets in Geneva three times a year. The ILO is composed of 80 nations, an exception being Hungary, denied admission because of the unjust and inhumane treatment of workers, Cabot-Lodge explained. Delegates from the National Association of Manufacturers and the National Chamber of Commerce, the AFL-CIO, and the state department represent the United States at the ILO.

The ILO discusses educational and technical training in labor relations, management, labor codes, and other labor issues, he said. The organization also works to establish vocational training assistance in underdeveloped countries.

Cabot-Lodge complimented the delegates from Southern Oregon college for their work with the International Relations clubs, and stated that activities such as those of the Model United Nations would be of "incalculable value" to furthering future international understanding and relations in the years to come.
