IN THE History OF Pharmacy
by Jim Foster

In the next few issues I think it would be interesting to you to learn some of the rules of the Council on Pharmacy and Chemistry of the American Medical Association. These rules are to protect the public and medical profession against deception and objectionable advertising—to advise the medical profession concerning the status of medicinal articles it is impertuned to use—to publish reports on claimed advances in the use of drugs and to elaborate standards for the control and identity of drugs that are introduced into materia medica.
