Selection of Hearing Aid
I recently read a book by Dr. Norton Canfield, of Yale University, called "A Hearing Handbook for Laymen" (Doubleday).

As the doctor points out, in the last few years, hearing aids have gotten smaller and more efficient. Now, they can give back a useful and interesting life to most hard-of-hearing people. Curiously, not all who are now hard-of-hearing seem really to want to hear better. When people try an aid, they hear a lot of queer and strange sounds, some of which they do not like. The aid will enable the person to hear voices, but these voices will probably not sound quite like they used to. Their timbre will be changed. Few people like their aid at first; it will take them a while to get used to it. The selection of the best aid for the individual may take some time, and expert help may be needed.

A person using an aid should go occasionally to try a new one because each manufacturer is constantly making improvements. Before going to choose an aid, one should get an audiometric test which will show just what sort of hearing loss one has. The expert can tell from the record how much difficulty the patient is likely to have in getting an aid that will help him.

Constant Improvements
How long will an aid last? Dr. Canfield advises changing every three to five years. It is good to keep taking advantage of the constant improvements being made. The person should get a year's guarantee, and he should find out if in his city he can get service and parts and batteries. This is very important. The buyer would often do well not to be too vain, and hence too anxious to get the smallest possible instrument. People who are hard of hearing should remember that their deafness can be even more obvious than would be a hearing-aid! Why not, then, get the aid that gives the best hearing?

I, personally, always feel extra kindly to the person with a hearing-aid. I guess I am glad to see that he had the good sense to wear the apparatus. But, actually, he did not need much sense; I have worn glasses for the last 66 years, and I never even know I have them on. The wearing of them never embarrassed me for a minute. They make me an active and useful man and rich life possible for me. Similarly, if I should lose my hearing, I would gladly wear an aid because it would bring me sounds, speech, music, laughter, fun, and enriching contacts with the world. The aid would keep me from growing solitary, and perhaps eccentric and suspicious and crabbed. It would enable me to hold fast to my friends, and it would enable me to hang onto my job which makes life worth living for me.

Mr. David G. Fleet of San Diego writes to tell me of infants who started with hearing aids before they were six months old. With the help of these aids, they have learned

Hope Emerson Dies in Hollywood
Hollywood—(UPI)—Actress Hope Emerson, who played the role of "Mother" in the Peter Gunn television series and "Sarge" on the Dennis O'Keefe TV show, died Sunday night of a liver ailment.

After a series of night club engagements throughout the country, she entered radio, playing "Toodles-Bong Snook" with Jimmy Durante and Gary Moore and numerous other parts.

Twentieth Century Fox first brought her to Hollywood to play the murderous masseuse in "Cry of the City." From there her star rose until she became one of filmland's top character actresses.

She portrayed roughhouse characters in most of her movie roles.

The crusty actress lived a "bachelor girl" existence for years, taking care of her aged mother who died recently. She maintained homes in her native Iowa, New York and Hollywood.
