Science Instructor Receives Danforth Foundation Grant

Ashland — Eugene A. Antley, social science instructor at Southern Oregon college, has been awarded one of 25 Danforth scholarships to attend a summer seminar on excellence in higher education. The seminar "Theological Dimensions of College Teaching" will be held at the Pacific School of Religion in Berkeley, Calif., from June 27 to July 8. The scholarship provides for rail expenses for members of college or university faculties in disciplines other than religion.

Members of the faculty will be Dr. William Lee Miller, assistant professor of social studies at the divinity school, Yale university, and Dr. Charles S. McCoy, professor of religion in higher education, Pacific School of Religion. Dr. Miller, a former staff writer for The Reporter magazine, will instruct a seminar entitled "Christian Ethics and American Politics." Dr. McCoy will lead the seminar "Christian Theology and Higher Education." Special guest lecturers will include professors Miller and Brooks Otis of Stanford university, and professors Hans Kelsen and Charles Glock of the University of California. "The Danforth seminar program seeks to provide an opportunity for the exploration of the theological dimensions inherent in all human endeavor," a foundation bulletin notes. "It seeks to examine Christian faith in terms of its relevance to the intellectual life of the college and university. And it seeks to examine the nature of higher education itself from the perspective of religious interest and concern."

Southern Californians Express Interest in Oregon Vacation

"Go north—it's the fashion." This is what they are saying these days in southern California, according to Don McNeil, manager of the Medford Chamber of Commerce. He spoke on the subject of Californians coming to Oregon at the chamber round-table luncheon Monday. McNeil helped to publicize Oregon in a tourist information booth at a Los Angeles Examiner-sponsored travel show in Los Angeles March 11-20. The Oregon booth, sponsored by the Oregon state travel department, was but one of a number of booths dispensing travel information at the show. McNeil said it was the first time such a show had been held there catering specifically to travel ideas and suggestions, and over 150,000 persons paid their dollar admission price to see it.

Impressed With State
He said they found a great number of persons who are impressed with Oregon and who think it is the most scenic and colorful state in the union. They talked to many persons who are planning to visit Oregon for the first time this summer and many who are coming back for their second, third and even fifth trips here. Others he talked to had been through Oregon on their way to British Columbia and had spent little time here, but they were so impressed with the state at the time that they are now planning vacations in just to see Oregon. Many southern Californians have gross misconceptions about Oregon, and the Pacific northwest, he pointed out. One of the stock statements he heard was, "Oregon, oh yes, that's where it rains all the time." Several Californians were so misinformed that they would ask for vacation information on the area between Portland and the Washington state line, he said. Among the reasons for these misconceptions, he pointed out, is the fact that people from the mid-west and east are moving to Los Angeles at the rate of 1,000 a day. Many of these persons have no idea at all of what it is like in the Pacific northwest. The majority of the persons who requested information about Oregon wanted to know about motor court facilities, sight-seeing areas, rock-hunting, water-skiing, fishing, and overnight camping facilities. He also met many persons who are seeking new homes away from the Los Angeles area and who are thinking of Oregon as the place to come and raise their families. Attributed to Tourists
McNeil said he is sure that much of Oregon's diversification of industry can be attributed to tourists who visit here, and are so impressed that they decide to stay. These new residents are responsible for creating many new jobs and products because they bring with them their skills and savings, he said. A good number of Californians whom McNeil talked to, wanted information on Oregon because they are looking for places to retire and are considering this state. Many of these are looking for climates similar to that found here in the valley, he said. The two areas in Oregon which Californians expressed the most interest in is the Oregon coast and the Central Oregon-Bend-Lake country. Attracted Interest
McNeil said the coast attracts so much interest because it is one of the few coast areas left in the U.S. which is still under public ownership and open to tourists. Most of the good coast line in California, he said, is under private ownership and closed to the public. The Central Oregon area is popular, he pointed out, because it has effectively promoted itself in an extensive publication and travel literature campaign. Many persons who requested information on the Central Oregon area already had the pamphlets that the travel booth was distributing and sought additional and more complete information. It did his heart good, McNeil said, to hear Californians say they wished their state parks system was as good as Oregon's. So many Oregon residents are always running down our state parks and saying they are not as good as California's, but this is not true, he said. Last summer, according to McNeil, 517,000 persons camped in Oregon's state parks compared to 340,000 persons, who visited, not necessarily camped at, Crater Lake. The total acreage of Oregon state parks is 30,500, which is but one-fifth of the total acreage at the Crater Lake park. McNeil said he is not trying to minimize Crater Lake, because it is perhaps Oregon's biggest tourist attraction, but he is trying to point out that the state is getting full mileage out of our state parks. Oregon is on the threshold of a tremendous influx of people in the next 10 years, he said, but it must watch out for several things. One of these is that the state must keep ahead of this influx by expanding our camping and fishing facilities accordingly. "We must watch out for land in the Rogue valley being purchased by speculators, he said. Many persons in the Los Angeles area are coming to Oregon, he noted, because they have purchased land here they have never seen. Land speculators in the Los Angeles and Phoenix areas have found they are having trouble acquiring land there because it is running out, and are eyeing such prospective growth areas as the Rogue valley for future speculation. "We must be careful, too," he said, "because this city and valley is reaching a boom point and will see tremendous development" including new businesses, payrolls and subdivisions and it should be controlled. "One thing we must worry about," he said, "is that we have no say over the character of our growth."

Locals

Meeting Thursday — Crater Lake aerie, Fraternal Order of Eagles, will hold initiation at their meeting, Thursday, April 28, in the Eagles hall, 219 West Main st., at 8 p.m. Officers will be nominated following the ceremony and election of officers will be held at the May 5 meeting. Refreshments will be served and the band will rehearse.

Hits Fence — A car operated by Natalie Schmiedt Coyle, 54, of 708 Park st., went off the road at the 500 block on King st. Sunday afternoon and drove across two lawns and through one fence before finally coming to rest against a second fence, according to city police. Police said Mrs. Coyle told them she could not remember driving the car or where she had been. No citations were issued.

Police In Accident — A city police car, operated by Patrolman Starling Rose Reese, 25, was involved in a minor traffic accident during the week end on Central ave., between Main and Eighth sts. Reese told officers that he was entering an alley alongside the Crater Lake theater when a vehicle operated by Richard Hugh Wright, 16, of 540 Midway rd., backed from a parking space on Central, striking the rear of his car. Damage was minor and no citations were issued.

Train Derailment Kills Conductor
Seneca, S.C. — (UPI) — Ten cars of a Washington-bound passenger train careened off the tracks near here Monday, killing the train conductor and injuring 12 passengers. Six cars of the Southern Railway's Peach Queen, a local train en route from Atlanta to the nation's capital, plunged down an embankment into a 50-foot ravine. Small oil fields that produce less than 25,000 barrels a day account for 87 per cent of the nation's crude oil production.

Weather FORECASTS
Medford tonight and Wednesday: Scattered showers, Wednesday afternoon. High 55, low 38. High 54, low 37. Thursday: Considerable clouds tonight and Wednesday. Scattered showers with brief sunny periods. Little change in temperature. Low tonight 38-44, high Wednesday 55-64. Northern California: Intermittent rain this evening, continuing Wednesday. Probably a few thunderstorms. Snow level about 5,000 feet. A little warmer.

Baker Competition Claimed Intense
Portland — (UPI) — Roger Williams, Salem, a baker for the past 44 years and general secretary of the Northwest Bakers Conference, said Monday competition among bakers is so intense that they have almost reached the point of not speaking to each other. Williams said the big emphasis these days is on marketing procedures. But he asserted that new processes in baking are continually being developed. He said the big baking companies are getting bigger and the small ones are getting smaller. Williams predicted that people will continue to pay for quality in baked goods and those bakers who compete only on the basis of price "will be cut to ribbons." More than 450 wholesale and retail bakers met here to learn new methods of marketing.

Medford Man Working At Research Center
Guy F. Hayes Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Guy F. Hayes, 623 North Central ave., is working as a civilian physicist in the Astro-Observation center in the U. S. Army Signal Research and Development Laboratory, Ft. Monmouth, N.J. Hayes is with the laboratory's Astro-Electronics division, responsible for technical supervision of the payload package and operation of the continental United States' only official Tires read out station, according to his father. Tires is the first weather-eye satellite which makes a round the world orbit while photographing and recording weather data.
