

Crazed Russian Bombs Airliner In Venezuela

Caracas, Venezuela—(UPI)—A crazed Russian who said he was a "space explorer" bombed a Venezuelan airliner Thursday and died in the crash with nine other passengers and crew members.

The Venezuelan Communications Ministry said the three survivors of the crash at Calabozo, 100 miles southeast of Caracas, told how the Russian terrorized the cabin before pulling the pin on a hand grenade and throwing it against the wall.

'Like Thunderclap'
A witness on the ground said the twin-engine American-built DC-3 exploded "like a thunderclap" in the air and crashed.

The bomber was identified as Vjacheslav Lavinski, a Russian, but it was not immediately known if he was a Soviet citizen or an exile. All other persons aboard the plane were Venezuelans.

The survivors said Lavinski jumped to his feet during the flight from Caracas to Puerto Ayacucho and shouted: "I'm a space explorer. I want to experience great emotion."

He tried to force his way into the pilot's compartment and other passengers tried to restrain him.

Pulled Arms Free
Co-pilot Olivo Parra, one of the survivors, rushed out of the compartment and seized Lavinski. He almost succeeded in overpowering him, but the Russian tore his arms free from Parra's grip, broke away, and pulled the hand grenade from his pocket.

As the terrified passengers watched, he pulled the pin and threw the grenade against the cabin wall. Survivors said a loud explosion rocked the plane and it plunged to the ground.

Businessmen Warned Against Abuses in Ads

Washington—(UPI)—The government warned businessmen today against abusing such advertising promises as "lowest price in town," "lifetime guarantee," and "satisfaction or your money back."

The federal trade commission served notice that from now on it would take steps to see that advertisers back up to the letter all of their guarantees.

The agency issued a guide to alert both consumers and businessmen as to what it considers false advertising of guarantees on products.

'Mailed Fist'
FTC Chairman Earl W. Kinter said the guide was essentially educational but contained a "mailed fist." In a speech prepared for delivery to the Better Business Bureau in Los Angeles, he warned that the commission would "bring legal action against an alleged violator" of the rules set forth in the new guide.

The guide stipulates that all product guarantees must "clearly and conspicuously" disclose the following information:

—What product or part of a product is guaranteed and an exact explanation of what the guarantee involves, including its duration.

—The manner in which the guarantee will be backed up—for example, by repair, replacement, or refund.

Guaranteeing Party
—Whether the manufacturer or the retailer is the guaranteeing party.

Kinter cited many examples of phony guarantees which he said make it tough for the honest businessman to compete with "the slick and the greedy."

He said many advertisers have found the slogan "guaranteed for life" valuable in

Film Censure Debate Costs $40

Portland—(UPI)—Failure to delete two scenes from the movie "The Lovers" cost the Guild theater $40 Thursday.

Judge J. J. Labadie imposed a $40 fine on Manager Nancy Welch for violating an order by Portland Chief of Police William Hilbruner to take out two scenes from the French-made film.

Miss Welch's lawyer, Bernard Shevach, said the theater plans to "appeal as far as we can go."

Argument by the defense of the film was that Hilbruner had not labeled the scenes "obscene" but merely had ordered them deleted.

The film ran for 10 days earlier this month at the Guild until two policemen and their wives, assigned as censors, objected to parts of the movie.

selling. But he added that "the advertiser should make it plain just whose life he has in mind—the purchaser's, the manufacturer's, the retailer's or the federal trade commission's."

American Gets Death Sentence In Indonesia

Jakarta—(UPI)—A three-man court martial sentenced Allen Pope, of Homestead, Fla., to death today for flying a bomber for the Indonesian rebels.

No date was set for execution. Pope showed no emotion when the sentence was read. "See you later," he said as he left the court.

Under Indonesian law, the American flier has seven days to decide whether to appeal to a higher court for a new trial or to ask for a presidential pardon.

Consults With Attorneys
The 31-year-old American conferred with his attorneys here on the next step in the case. He is expected also to consult lawyers in New York and members of his family in Florida.

In Perrine, Fla., Pope's father, Lawrence, said today "I have no comment at all to make" on the sentence.

Pope, who was captured when his plane was shot down near Ambon in eastern Indonesia on April 18, 1958, was found guilty on all of four counts charged against him.

Death Doubt
There was a considerable doubt, however, that he actually would be put to death. A number of death sentences have been imposed by Indonesian courts since this country came into existence, but no one has been executed.

It appeared probable that he would win a lighter sen-

Mental, Physical Health of People Reviewed at Event

Dr. Harry Danielson, local psychiatrist, and Dr. Ruth Beber were the guest speakers last night at a meeting of the Oregon United Nations association, Medford Chapter.

The two gave talks on the mental and physical health of Americans, and what significance our health holds for living in the modern world.

Dr. Danielson reviewed the lecture given here last year by Dr. Brock Chisolm on a similar topic. Dr. Chisolm had brought out that "when our technology is changing so rapidly, our minds must be flexible to cope with the changes. Today's children often have healthy imaginations, repressed by parents who fear abnormalities in thinking. Psychologists are now studying how minds can be made more creative and adaptable to new ideas," he noted.

Basic Requirement
"One of the basic requirements for an astronaut is that his mind be flexible so he can meet the challenge of strange circumstances," Dr. Chisolm had noted.

Degenerative diseases are America's major health problem, Dr. Beber brought out. "Although we are among the longest-lived in the world, death rates in the United States between the ages of 40 and 65 are higher than among Europeans and other English-speaking peoples," she said.

Most of the deaths between those years are from degenerative diseases such as cancer, Dr. Beber noted. Many chronic diseases can be cured or prevented, and good nutrition and exercise are important, even necessary, to avoid these diseases, she added.

Dr. Beber also spoke of health problems in other nations. She brought out that the United Nations has been a frustrating enterprise as far as politics goes, but it has been successful in the field of world health.

Due to UN activities, malaria has decreased 50 percent in the last 10 years, and it may be obliterated in another 20 years.

Hard to Provide
As far as the health of the world is concerned, Dr. Beber pointed out that it is hard to provide nutrition for already undernourished peoples because of the fact that the birth rate seems to go up as animal protein consumption goes down.

American's degenerative diseases may also come as a result of the chemicals used in treating and preserving food, she said. "We do not know how safe many chemicals are: things such as DDT, detergents, insecticides and fungicides actually accumulate in the body fats," she added. Speaking about Oregon, Dr. Beber pointed out that Oregon has one of the worst dental health records in the nation.

"One of our worst crimes is that we ruin our health with soft drinks, cigarettes, no exercise and poor diet, then we want other nations to emulate our way of life," Dr. Beber said.

Mrs. H. P. Bosworth, president of the Medford OUNA chapter, has a tape recording of the two talks if any one is interested in borrowing it, local chapter officials said.
