Itching of the Crotch

Hundreds of people want to know what to do for itching of the crotch. Sometimes these patients have to see three or four different types of specialists. First, there is a general examination, preferably by an internist, to make sure that the patient is not suffering from diabetes or Hodgkin's disease or any other general disease in which there can be a widespread itching. With cases of diabetes, the surgical urine can be irritating. Women should often have a gynecologist check them to see if there is any local discharge, or disease that can cause the itching. Sometimes this is a dermatologist, or skin specialist, who can try soothing drugs. A neurologist or a psychiatrist or a physician who is interested in neuroses will ask about worries and nervous strains and anxieties. Occasionally, a rectal specialist should look at the anus to see if there is anything wrong there. Even after all these studies are made, it may be hard to decide what should be done.

Mongoloid Children

A while ago, when, after an extensive review of the literature on Mongolism I stated that for the last 30 years experts have felt sure there was some inherited factor, I received some violent letters from people who accused me of gross ignorance. They said that the disease is due to the advanced age of the mother. This, of course, is a factor, but obviously it isn't the important factor because any number of mongoloid children are born to young mothers. Also, in almost all cases in which a mongoloid infant has an unlike twin, this twin is not mongoloid, as it would have been if the mother's age were the important factor.

I won't here mention all of the many other facts which point to a genetic factor; all I will say is that recently a number of workers (particularly P. A. Jacobs, A. G. Balkic, W. M. Court Brown and J. A. Strong, London Lancet, No. 7075) have found that the cells of mongoloids have an extra chromosome. This fact can explain most of the known observations in regard to mongolism, and it can relieve the minds of all those many parents of mongoloid who, for years, suffer terribly, blaming themselves for what happened. Actually, now, it appears that a mongoloid was formed at the moment of conception. Usually there are no other mongoloids in the immediate family of a mongoloid, but there are families in which there are as many as four such children.
