Once-Mighty Corregidor Fort Now Crumbling From Neglect

Corregidor, Philippines — The "Rock" has fallen upon bad days. This great symbol of American and Filipino courage and perseverance is crumbling in ruins, forgotten by all but the few remaining men who helped defend it.

It is a neglected shambles of weeds, rust — and ghostly memories. Eighteen years ago — on May 7, 1942 — Gen. Johnathan Wainwright surrendered Corregidor to the Imperial Japanese army, which had crushed the defenders of Bataan barely a month before.

Today, the great guns point silently toward the South China sea. The shells remain neatly stacked and unfired. For, as was the tragic case at Singapore, they were emplaced to shoot in only one direction — to the sea. The Japanese came from the rear, on Bataan, and Corregidor's "impregnable" guns were helpless.

Small Detachment
There is a small detachment of the Philippines navy on Corregidor today. Its members live with their families in a little village near the old stone wharfs and guide an occasional visitor through the giant underground tunnels in which hundreds of thousands of artillery shells are stored.

At the highest point on the fortress island, a lighthouse serves to guide ships into Manila bay.

Below, overgrown by the jungle, are the rows of gutted barracks left, more or less, as they were those 18 years ago. Rats nest in smashed G.I. footlockers. Lizards scurry over rusted steel helmets.

It is as if the battlefield was frozen in sudden silence a decade ago and the world locked out.

Gen. Douglas MacArthur's hillside headquarters (the later moved into the tunnels below) still stands intact, a few scraps of faded paper fluttering on the bulletin board.

The once carefully mowed parade fields are waist high in weeds. Scattered about are parts of weapons, smashed helmets.

There are many shallow graves. There are many human bones.

Atop a small pole, near the deserted tunnels, is a sun-bleached skull of some forgotten soldier — an American, Filipino, or Japanese? No one knows. It stares starkly at the silent sea.

ently in some cases, with blood. They are signed by men from West Virginia and New Jersey and little villages throughout the Philippines.

These were the immortal Filipino scouts and the National Guardsmen and the regular army, who made the last stand.

Patterned Wool Slacks Making News for Spring
What's new in lightweight wool slacks this Spring? Patterned wool slacks, for one thing, are now making news. They're a bright addition to every man's wardrobe, and they go nicely with sports coats.

You'll find patterns galore. Houndstooth checks, stripes, glen plaids, district check flannels. You can choose between bold and muted patterns.

You'll see them in conservative ivy styling, which is correct for young, slim men in the 18 to 30 bracket, and for family men there is the smart Continental styling. Regardless of age, you'll find a style that looks best for you.

Ivy slacks this season are cut more trim and tapered than last year. Pleated, they're worn cuffed. Periodically a minor scandal blows up in Manila newspapers after bands of looters and thieves make off with metal and explosives.

Auto Officials Predict Big Year
Auto officials are predicting that 1960 will witness the sale of from 6,500,000 to 7,000,000 cars in this country — with 500,000 of these autos foreign models. Last year, the automotive industry increased its investment for new passenger car advertising in newspapers an estimated 20.4 per cent over 1958.

Portland — The Oregon Young Democrats at their 29th annual convention here Saturday passed a resolution calling for the United States to assume the lead in revamping the United Nations.

Austria has more doctors per capita than most other countries and its draws medical students from all over the world.

There has been talk, and reports, for several years about plans to build a great memorial here to these men. Two years ago, in Washington, a bill was passed in Congress authorizing $7,500,000 for this purpose. The Senate, however, failed to act on it and the bill has been re-introduced in the current Congress.

Emmet O'Neal, chairman of the Corregidor-Bataan memorial commission, has asked congress for $398,000 to keep the commission alive for another year in hopes the Corregidor memorial will be authorized by then.

Plans Not Pushed
Filipino leaders — and Corregidor is now part of the Philippines republic — are not pushing the memorial plans. Several weeks ago, a group of leaders, including military representatives, toured "the Rock." Their main interests, however, were proposals to develop Corregidor as a money-making tourist attraction.

"The Rock" is only 22 miles from Manila and is a pleasant two-hour boat ride. But, so far, no regular scheduled ferry service is available. Written permission is required from the Philippines Navy and guards will fire warning shots at uninvited intruders.

This is the result, in part, of periodic raids made on Corregidor by scrap metal scavengers. They have, over the years, stripped "The Rock" of many of its priceless relics.

Periodically a minor scandal blows up in Manila newspapers after bands of looters and thieves make off with metal and explosives.

Then, it is generally forgotten.
