Senior Citizens May Cause Hike In Suicide Rate

London-Science Service—More senior citizens commit suicide than do persons in any other age group. With more persons living to age 60 or more, the suicide rate will rise unless the medical profession does something about it, a Welsh doctor believes.

Of 881 suicides in Wales between 1951 and 1955, Dr. Alan Capstick of Whitchurch Hospital, Cardiff, Wales, found that nearly 40 per cent of the persons who took their own lives were more than 60 years old. This is a disproportionately high percentage, since the over-60 age group does not make up 40 per cent of the population.

Clue Sought
Dr. Capstick checked suicide notes and statements by persons who last saw the victims alive to see if there was any clue that doctors could use to identify potential suicides.

He found that 39 per cent of the suicides appeared depressed during their last hours. Such depression was reported most commonly in suicides aged 60 or more. Notes left by older victims usually included complaints of physical illness, references to the hereafter and a concern for relatives.

About 35 per cent of all suicides studied appeared normal immediately before death but most of them had been depressed previously. These suicides occurred most frequently below age 30. Dr. Capstick said that the normal appearance might be due to the victim's giving up the struggle and finding some peace in the belief that it was almost finished.

Notes left by those who appeared normal or emotionally disturbed-irritable, angry, worried, afraid or suspicious—more often indicated that the suicide was intended to hurt or take revenge on another person, in contrast to the "complaint type" of note left by the severely depressed.

Dr. Capstick also learned that nearly 80 per cent had been under a doctor's care during the months before death. This factor indicates that the doctors could prevent some of the suicides if they could recognize the danger signals.

However, Dr. Capstick reported in the British Medical Journal psychiatric treatment cannot prevent all suicides. The person who decides on death and then acts quickly probably can not be stopped. And it is doubtful that medical intervention can save a really determined would-be suicide. Ninety-two of the persons studied committed suicide despite treatment in a mental hospital.

Reluctant Satellite Fell 10 Days Late

Washington (Air Force Service)—The U.S. Air Force's reluctant satellite Discoverer XI, which fouled up a ground recovery attempt by staying in orbit on April 16, has stopped spinning around the earth.

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration's control center at Goddard Space Flight center here reports that the 310-pound capsule apparently fell from its shallow orbit on April 26—ten days later than planned.

This left three Vanguard, three Explorer, the Transit navigational satellite and the Tyros satellite in orbit around the earth. Also still in space are two U.S. and two Russian space probes—Pioneers IV and V, and Luniks I and III.

The U.S. Air Force, meanwhile, said its latest information on Discoverer XI comes from a publication of its Ballistic Missiles division dated April 27 stating that both capsule and its final-stage rocket were still in orbit.

Doctor Confused on Kissing Question

Providence, R.I.—When the number of cases of flu here began to rise, Dr. Joseph Smith, Providence superintendent of health, took to the airwaves.

"Those attending parties should not kiss with one another," he said.

"No kissing for the duration of the winter season?" inquired his interviewer.

"No, I never said that," replied Dr. Smith. "A person with a cold should avoid kissing."

He passed, then added, "indiscriminate kissing."
