The Medical Roundup

by Walter Alvarez

Emeritus Consultant in Medicine Mayo Clinic
Emeritus Professor of Medicine Mayo Clinic

Some Early Symptoms of a Depression

In the Journal of the Irish Medical Association, Dr. J. P. Fogarty points out so wisely that many persons in our civilization have brief spells of depression, most of which clear up in days or weeks or months without any psychiatric treatment. Unfortunately, in many cases, the real nature of the illness is not diagnosed because so few of us doctors were ever trained in college to recognize the early symptoms of a spell of melancholia.

Dr. Alvarez

As Dr. Fogarty says, one of the most typical signs of a depression is a feeling of distressing fatigue in the mornings, a fatigue which wears off during the day so that it may all be gone by five o'clock in the afternoon. Often the person feels toxic and without energy, and he may feel pain here and there in his body. He may be uncomfortable about his heart. He may find it almost impossible to get at his day's work, or even to read. He is likely to sit in silence.

A woman may have what she calls "Crying jags," or she may have days when she is irritable, and when she scolds her poor innocent husband for hours at a time. Typical are spells in which the woman blames herself unfairly, and talks much of grievous sins. When asked what these sins were, she is unable to describe them. Often the woman loses all interest in home, husband, friends, and even her children. For a while, she may lose much weight. In the cases of both women and men, all interest in sex is likely to be lost.

When one of these depressed women comes into his office, an observant physician may note that she is slow in her speech, and slow in answering questions. If the doctor asks about a desire for suicide, the patient will usually admit that she has thought seriously of it. It is helpful, diagnostically, to find that the patient went on a month's vacation and came back feeling, if anything, worse. It is very helpful, also, to find that one or more near relatives have had depressions, or have had depressions, or have committed suicide. Occasionally, a relative, in his depressions, will drink heavily with the hope of finding relief. If a spell of depression lasts long, a psychiatrist can give a few brief and now usually harmless electroshocks, shocks which are likely to bring the patient quickly out of the attack.

Dr. Alvarez' booklet on mental illness may be obtained by sending a stamped, large, envelope and 25 cents to Dr. Walter C. Alvarez, Dept. MMT, The Register and Tribune Syndicate, Box 957, Des Moines 4, Iowa.

Oregon Family Of Year Selected

Portland (UPI)—The Winthrop A. Wells family of Portland was named Thursday night as Oregon's all-American family of the year.

The selection was announced by Mrs. Carl L. Krause, chairman of a state committee of the Oregon Federated Women's Clubs.

Mr. and Mrs. Wells have three boys, age 13 to 17. He is employed by the Army engineers here.

The Wells family will spend a week, May 24-June 1, at Lehigh Acres, Fla., with winning families from the other 49 states and the District of Columbia. After that the all-American family of the year will be named.

JUNIOR HOSEMEN

Beaumont, Tex. (UPI)—Firemen rushed to answer a call Thursday and forgot the supper they left cooking on the stove. Ed Coleman Jr., 14, and Ramie Griffin Jr., 13, who saved the station by putting out the resulting blaze with a garden hose, said all they got was a "chilly" thanks from the chief.
