

QUIPS AND QUOTES

An artist was presenting his qualifications for the job of illustrator of a seed catalogue. "Well," said the skeptical manager, "I'm not sure you can handle the art we need."

He leafed through last year's issue. "Just look at the gorgeous reds in this lush tomato, the cool greens of the watermelons, and the firm tones of this radish."

The manager looked forcefully at the artist. "Now tell me, why do you think you're qualified to do art like this?"

"Well," the artist replied, "my last job was illustrating fairy tales."

The teen-age hot rodder's luck finally gave out, and he wrapped his auto around a tree. When he came to, his first words were, "Where am I?"

"Take it easy," said a nurse, reassuringly. "You are in 114."

The youth waited a moment, then asked cautiously, "Room or cell?"

A party of American tourists was being guided through an ancient castle in England. Coming to the banquet hall, the old family retainer told the visitors in hushed tones, "In this very room 200 years ago, the young countess was foully murdered."

Everybody was impressed except one elderly lady who piped up, "I took this tour last year, and you said then that it happened in the study."

"Quite right, madam," the guide replied icily. "But the study is being redecorated this year."
