

Family Council

Editor's Note: The Family Council consists of a judge, a postmaster, three clergymen, a newspaper editor, a newspaper publisher, a newspaper writer. Each article is a summary of an actual case. The Family Council reports on problems that have been dealt with by responsible agencies and counselors.

Sharon R. — Mother tries to push me.

Mr. M. R. — I'm only trying to help her.

Sharon R. — I am a single girl of 24. I am considered fairly attractive and I dress well, but unfortunately I don't have much social life. My mother is always trying to push me into things and she causes me a lot of embarrassment. She always talks about me to her neighbors, asking whether they know anyone I can go out with. Sometimes they have someone call me and we go out, but I feel you never meet anyone worthwhile that way. I have only one close girl friend and she doesn't go out much either. We both joined a social club last fall, but we didn't meet anyone we liked. I would like to move away from this community because the people aren't very social-minded.

Mr. M. R. — Nobody can understand why Sharon has so much difficulty finding men friends. She is considered very pretty and quite smart.

I feel she is just too shy and backward and I want to help her all I can. What is the harm in asking friends and neighbors if they know any nice, suitable men? I met my own husband through an older woman whose store I used to patronize. She liked me and introduced me to the son of a friend of hers. We clicked immediately. What was there to be embarrassed about? Sharon keeps nagging about moving away from this community, but I don't think I'd want to do it even if it were practical. One place is as good as another.

The Council: People who feel they could be happier living in some other place or with some other family or marriage partner are looking for something that can only be found within themselves. They lack the spark that makes happy individuals love everything and everyone around them.

We all get our share of good and bad things in life, but the individual who constantly stresses the bad has developed the habit of self-torture, and the one who stresses the good has developed the habit of happiness. Both habits grow stronger with the years, so it is important to set the better pattern at an early age. Sharon, like many individuals of her type, has found a companion to share her habit of fault-finding. This can be the only reason two young women weren't able to find a single person they could like in a large social organization.

Sharon shows clearly that she rejects most of the men she meets. Yet she feels rejected by them. This is why she is embarrassed when her mother seeks dates for her. Pride will not let her say she is afraid of one more rejection. It is significant that many lonely girls shun blind dates, while popular ones welcome them.

Sharon should try to step out of this circle of pride and shame. She needs to forget about her own feelings and learn to like both men and women. It is certainly true that one place is as good as another as far as people are concerned. No community is without interesting, desirable human beings.

When Sharon learns to like others, she will find them liking her and she'll look forward to every opportunity to meet them.

Frightened Burglar Forgets His Ladder
South Bend, Ind. — A burgling burglar slumped and bumped so loudly in an early morning sortie, he woke up his intended victim and was chased away... suffering a net loss.

Mrs. Fred Hess told police rattling noises against the side of her house awakened her. She looked out the window and saw a man scaling a ladder to a second-floor window. Mrs. Hess rapped on the glass and the burglar leaped to the ground and fled, leaving his extension ladder behind.

Bug Smugglers Expected To Be Active in Summer

Washington — The plant and animal quarantine inspectors at the Agriculture Department are expecting the usual run of bug smugglers, orange smelters and sausage slippers this summer.

The inspectors know that several million Americans will be going abroad on holiday and business trips this year. They also know a reasonable number of these travelers will come home with forbidden agricultural products in their baggage. Inspectors on Guard

The inspectors stand guard at ports to enforce a law which regulates the entry of all kinds of agricultural products. The law is there to keep out foreign bugs, plant and animal diseases, and other pests which could cause millions of dollars in damages if they slipped in.

"Take foot and mouth disease, for instance. We don't have it in the United States. If it did slip in and infect cattle it could cost taxpayers and farmers huge sums. Most returning travelers are warned against bringing meat products home because meats from some areas may be infected with foot and mouth virus.

Every now and then the inspectors run into a sausage slipper, trying to get a piece of his favorite delicacy home to Aunt Mabel. One traveler was nabbed last year trying to bring in meat sealers. He had a can of olive oil. Another turned up with contraband meat concealed in a pastry.

Then there are the orange smelters and bug smugglers who bring in insects living on plants.

The border inspectors found one price pair at Brownsville, Tex. A pasteboard box in their car was labeled "thermos bottle." When inspectors opened the thermos, they found it full of forbidden grapefruit and oranges. Then they took a closer look at the car.

Items Destroyed

They found fruit and plants in plastic bags under the auto seats, inside a hat, in the trunk, in a suitcase, under some loose clothing, hidden under shoes, and in a cracker box.

The forbidden items were destroyed. But that wasn't the strangest collection turned up. Two travelers coming home from Europe told inspectors in New York recently they had four oranges in their suitcase.

"That's all?" the inspectors asked.

"That's all," the voyagers said.

So the inspectors looked. They found: prickly pears, grape cuttings, tangerines, oranges, lemons, seven ears of corn, a ham, five pounds of sausage, two pounds of beans, and fig, citrus, and loquat plants.

Safety Rules for Kite-Flyers Listed

New York — Five safety rules for boys who fly kites offered by one of the nation's large electric systems (West Penn Electric).

—Fly your kite away from electric wires and television antennas. Always use dry cotton string-not metal.

—Pick a level spot away from power lines, one without big rocks or trees, so you'll have plenty of room to run.

—Never use highways or streets for flying kites. Traffic can be a hazard.

—Make sure your kite does not have any metal in it—timed or strands of wire. These or wet cord could mean serious injury or even cost your life if they come into contact with electric lines.

—Be sure your kite is properly coiled so it won't become entangled. If your kite does get caught or tangled in a tree or wire, leave it there. Don't climb to free it. Another kite is cheaper than injury or death caused by falling into contact with electric lines.
