Spinal Curvature

Of late, several persons who are suffering from a worsening spinal curvature have asked if the pain they have been getting in their a b o m e n could be due to pressure on nerves that are pinched between two collapsing vertebrae.

Most assuredly the pain can be arising in the curving spine. I well remember women who, either in girlhood or old age, had a collapsing spine, and who promptly got abdominal pain that some people thought was due to colitis. Actually, it was being produced in pinched nerves.

This is a miserable disease because often even a good orthopedist finds it almost impossible to stop the process that threatens to make the victim into almost a lunch-bag. Commonly, no one is sure why the back is curving in, and no one is sure what can be done to stop the process. Often the person is put into a body cast or body brace, or an operation is performed to splint part of the spine. In the cases of old people with a spine that is losing its lime salts, female and male hormones are given, but I cannot remember ever having seen any very good results.

Northwest To Be Below Normal

Suitland, Md. — (Science Service) — The northeast quarter of the nation will have temperatures averaging above normal during the next month, the U.S. Weather Bureau's extended forecast section here predicted.

The 30-day outlook for the period from mid-May to mid-June also calls for temperatures to average above normal in the extreme Southwest. Below normal temperatures are expected along the Gulf Coast and over the Southeast, as well as in the western Plateau states and the Pacific Northwest.

In unspecified areas, thermometer readings are predicted to average near normal. Precipitation is expected to exceed normal over the northern half of the country from the Great Lakes westward to the Pacific Coast and also over the Central Plains states. Subnormal rainfall is forecast for the Middle Atlantic states, the Tennessee valley and also the far Southwest.

Elsewhere, near normal precipitation is predicted.
