Guardsmen Face Theft Charges

Ontario, Ore. —(UP)—Three Idaho Air National Guardsmen Thursday were released to the custody of their group commander after arraignment on charges of grand larceny of a house trailer May 12 at Owyhee lake.

Preliminary hearing for the three men, including one officer, all of Boise, was set for 10 a.m. Tuesday.

They were identified as Donald L. Newbill, 26; Roger L. Smith, 24, and Charles F. Barnes, 26. They were placed in the custody of Col. Martin J. Johnson, commander of the Guard's 124th fighter group, pending their court appearance.

Oregon State Police Sgt. Russell Haynes said Newbill is a lieutenant in the guard and Smith and Barnes are both sergeants.

Haynes said the trailer was found at Gowen field at Boise. He said it had been "remodeled" into a mobile canteen and that a hole was cut in the side.

Oregon State Police Sgt. Russell Haynes said Newbill is a lieutenant in the guard and Smith and Barnes are both sergeants.

Quotes From the News

BY UNITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL
New York—Former U.S. Ambassador to Russia Averell Harriman, stating he is sure the controversial great seal of the United States was not bugged when a Soviet official gave it to him in 1945:
"We were very careful about that sort of thing."

Hollywood—Writer-producer James Clavell, discussing his ideas for a movie about Francis G. Powers, pilot of the U2 downed over Russia:
"This could be one of the great mystery stories of our time."

Santiago, Chile—Maj. Glendon McAdams, assistant U.S. air attache in Santiago, describing Chilean earthquake victims after a flight to Valdivia:
"Every time we land at Valdivia airport scores of people are waiting, willing to get out of there. It's still raining. There are still rumblings at night."

Tokyo—British Field Marshal Viscount Montgomery, now visiting Red China, quoted by the Communist New China News agency as praising changes in China since his last visit 30 years ago:
"From what I have seen, I like the new China better than the old."

Hanson's Staging Of 'Moby Dick' Is Received Well

Take a darkly curtained stage with three pools of light revealing a single chair, a small bench with a little harp on it, and at the back a design of heavy ropes and steel rods suggesting sail rigging. Add one man, and if that man is Philip Hanson presenting "Moby Dick" the audience is assured a dramatic treat.

It seems well nigh impossible that one individual, however gifted, could even begin to convey the power and emotional depth of the great Herman Melville novel in less than two hours. But Hanson does this—even the doubting ones in the audience last night at Southern Oregon college's Churchill hall auditorium conceded at the close of the performance that he had succeeded.

Hanson, the mood established by the lights and almost bare stage, opens his story with a relaxed prologue just long enough to allow the audience to "settle in." Then, scene by scene, he outlines the story, sketches in the characters and builds up to the tension-filled climax. The audience last night met and understood Captain Ahab, of the whaler, Pequod, whose life was absorbed, and ended, by his hatred of the great white legendary whale which had cost him a leg; the sparse

Quakerish Starbuck, chief mate whose warnings of disaster were fulfilled; the heathenish Queequeg, the philosophical carpenter and others of the crew.

The actor's transitions from one character to the next seem natural. There is humor enough to relieve the stark weight of some passages, and the actor eases the whole by singing sea chanteys, playing an accompaniment on the little harp.

But Hanson does not allow his audience to forget the epic hunt for the killer whale, or the cloud of fate which hangs over the ship and crew. His rich, expressive voice painted the picture and brought the story to a powerful ending. The audience, which seldom stirred throughout the performance, applauded at length and its members sat, unmoving for a time even after the dark-clothed actor had left the stage for the last time. One wonders if his slight body can withstand the great effort which he expends during his one-man show.

The SOC Players sponsored last night's performance, and this reviewer believes that at some later date it should be repeated.

Hanson left immediately after last night's program for San Francisco where he is giving "Moby Dick" tonight and Saturday night.—O.S.

Wall Street Chatter

New York —(UP)—Whether or not there is a step-up in defense expenditures is probably immaterial to the electronics industry, according to R. E. Buchsbaum of W. E. Hutton & Co.

Increased government spending is necessary if many of the small firms in a precarious financial position are to survive, he says, although it isn't necessary to promote dynamic new developments in the field.

Regardless of international tensions the vague in electronics stocks shows no sign of slackening in spite of increased competition and the excessive price-earnings ratios at which the stocks are selling. Buchsbaum says.

CRATERIAN

Washington —(UP)— More than 21 million letters end up in the dead letter office throughout the country, undeliverable and unreturnable, according to the Postmaster General's office. First class mail clearing through the New York Post Office annually is estimated at nearly 6 billion pieces.
