Inhale and Be Happy

Several months ago, the United States hockey team inhaled oxygen before the final period of its game with Czechoslovakia and came from behind to win the Winter Olympics. Since then, I have been experimenting in household uses of oxygen and now officially release my findings:

In early spring, while planting radishes, felt faint and exhausted. Took two whiffs from my portable tank and went on to complete three rows of radishes, transplant three tomato plants, and straighten a trellis before effects wore off.

At recent Sunday dinner, encountered difficulty carving meat loaf. Only two quick whiffs from handy inhaler and whittled right through meat loaf and part of carving board. Had enough energy left to stack dishes in sink for wife to wash and dry.

At the club, was dealt a bridge hand containing 13 spades. Uncertain of bid, I turned to oxygen. Before I knew it, was bidding seven spades and on my way toward a series of brilliant plays which would have made the contract if some poor sport hadn't unscrewed my valve.

Tank empty right now, but when I get a refill I'll give you 6-5 I'll have energy to walk into the garden to see what happened to those radishes.

HOT? TIRED? TRY A FRESH-UP SODA BATH

Just add a cup of Arm & Hammer bicarbonate of soda to a tub of warm water... and relax

Doctors recommend soda baths for the relief of itching skin, sunburn and other skin irritations. Wonderful when you're hot and tired. Makes you feel heavenly fresh all over. Keep Arm & Hammer bicarbonate of soda—commonly called baking soda—in your bathroom. Buy it at food stores.

In certain areas, such as metropolitan New York, the same high quality soda is sold under the name COW BRAND.
