

Pasternak Left Over Million in Book Royalties

London - (AP) - Russian author Boris Pasternak probably left more than a million dollars in the West in royalties from "Dr. Zhivago," the book mainly responsible for his Nobel Prize, it has been reported.

Pasternak died Monday night at his residence outside Moscow without ever trying to get a penny of it. The Soviet government probably would have blocked him if he had.

£664,000 in Britain
The London Daily Telegraph quoted a salesman for the British publishing firm of Collins as saying that British royalties on the book, which was banned in Russia, amounted to $664,000.

Royalties in the United States were higher, the spokesman said, and a paperback edition here has sold more than a million copies. Collins said Zhivago, a panoramic novel of discontent with life under Soviet communism, had sold 330,000 copies in Britain and that royalties were paid on the basis of 15 per cent to Feltrinelli, the Italian publisher who first brought the book out of Russia.

Money Held in Italy
The money was reported being held in Italy and what will happen to it was a matter of speculation. There was no indication whether the Soviet government or Pasternak's relatives in England would file a claim for it.

The death of the author went unreported in the Soviet Union where he fell into disgrace because of the novel. Soviet journalists said Pasternak's death was "not news."

Pasternak was to be buried in a quiet funeral today in a little cemetery near the dacha where he died.

My Wanted Soda, Got Only Bleach

Casper, Wyo. — Phil Bell, 11, put his nickel in the dispensing machine and out popped a cup which was filled with a foamy white liquid. He drank it and then was rushed to the hospital where a stomach pump was used on him.

Next time he goes to the laundromat with his mother he'll know better than to try to get soda pop out of a laundry bleach vending machine.
