

U2 Plane Incident Gives Americans View Of Uncle Sam as Big, Deceitful Operator

By WARREN DUFFEE
Washington—(UPI)—A real life cloak-and-dagger thriller spun around the intriguing name "U2" has given most Americans their first view of Uncle Sam as a big-time operator in the shady, deceitful and dangerous world of international espionage.

It also brought, with a shock to many U.S. citizens, the public admission that their government will—and does—tell baldface lies to cover spying activities.

And in the tense days since the high-flying U2 was downed in Russia May 1, the world has seen for the first time a head of state—President Eisenhower—take personal responsibility for spying activities.

These are some of the developments that bothered the Senate Foreign Relations Committee when it began top-secret hearings a week ago into the ill-fated U2 flight and other circumstances surrounding collapse of the Paris summit conference.

They still bother most of the members, including Chairman J. William Fulbright (D-Ark.). The committee ended the hearings on Thursday and will begin considering a report this week. But it may never agree on one.

After four days of tightly-guarded hearings, with witnesses' testimony carefully censored, a lot more is known about what happened. But there is still doubt in the minds of some senators as to why it happened.

Also still unanswered is, where do we go from here? Out of the welter of testimony—661 censor-screened pages—this general picture emerges:

The United States, of course has been spying all along with the activities directed by the hush hush Central Intelligence Agency headed by Allen W. Dulles. This was no secret to anyone around Washington or overseas.

U2 Flights Since 1956
This country has been using the high-altitude U2, a single-engine jet reconnaissance plane that can fly above the reach of any Soviet interceptors, since 1956 for valuable photographic work and weather information gathering.

Several successful flights were made across Russia before the May 1 incident when pilot Francis G. Powers was captured by the Soviets.

meeting before the U2 gave him an excuse.

Why was the flight necessary so near the summit date? Eisenhower told the nation that the information the plane was seeking might not have been available at a later date. Fulbright said the committee never was able to find out what specific data the plane was seeking, even from Dulles, whose entire testimony was kept secret.

Gates and Dulles told the committee of the great value of the U2 flights—how the probing camera eyes recorded invaluable information on the extent of Russian military might.

Although the Air Force did not operate the flights, Gates said the military was the "prime customer" for the information. The flights, he said, produced "information on airfields, aircraft, missiles, missile testing and training, special weapons storage, submarine production, atomic production, aircraft deployments," and similar Soviet secrets.
