

The Family Council

Editor's Note: The Family Council consists of a judge, a psychiatrist, three clergymen, a newspaper editor and two writers. Each article is a summary of an actual case history. The history is reported by responsible agencies and counselors.

Mrs. F. R. - His wife is cold to us.
Leonard R. - They are welcome to visit without invitations.

Mrs. F. R. - My husband and I are in our late 60s. We recently sold the business in which we have worked together throughout our married life.

Now that we have more time on our hands, we would like to see more of our married children. Unfortunately, only one of them, our 28-year-old son Lenny, lives near enough for us to make frequent visits.

However, Lenny's wife is a very cold person and never asks us over for dinner or an evening of chat. But they don't hesitate to call on us any time they want us to babysit. We don't mind helping, but we don't want to be treated like servants. Lenny says I have the wrong slant on the whole thing.

Leonard R. - My mother has always been very sensitive about the way people treat her and sometimes takes offense at nothing. My wife is quite fond of Mother, but she just isn't the type to gab over the phone a few times a day as Mom would like.

I don't feel it should be necessary to extend formal invitations to parents. My parents know they can come any time they like. We would open the door wide any time they arrived.

It never occurred to us that Mom and Dad might object to babysitting. We thought they loved to come here and spend an evening with their grandchildren. Many times they have said it's no burden at all for them. Now, all of a sudden, they are resentful.

The Council: It's apparent that these parents have good reason to feel offended.

Babysitting is a pleasure to most grandparents, but it is also a chore. The responsibility is no small one and young children are often far too energetic for the limited strength of elderly grandparents. Most of them take on the job not merely to please themselves, but to do something helpful for their children. Parents are accustomed to giving as children are to receiving, but as the years go on the situation tends to reverse itself. Some children rebel against taking. Others would be willing to take, but the parents find themselves unable to give less. Eventually, even financially independent parents find themselves on the taking end in terms of emotions. They may become quite dependent upon their children for companionship and psychological uplift.

We don't think the F.R.'s have reached this stage. As long as they can be physically active they can find amusement and interests on their own, but they do feel a little insecure about the future. They want to know whether or not they have a strong and deep relationship with their son and his wife.

We don't think Lenny's statement that his door is open to his parents at any time is sufficient reassurance or a sufficient invitation. Parents who do not feel free to visit children unannounced usually sense a negative attitude on the part of their child and his mate.
