

Chemicals Used In Pest Control Slated for Study

Washington (Science Service)—The effects on America's wildlife of chemicals used to control agricultural pests will be investigated by a special committee appointed by the National Academy of Sciences—National Research Council.

The new Committee on Pest Control—Wildlife Relationships is a response to a growing concern among conservationists that some of the more recent chemical controls, while advancing both agriculture production and public health, may be harmful to desirable wildlife.

Seeks Sound Program

The committee seeks to establish a sound program for effective plant protection without causing permanent damage to useful animals. Among its functions will be to provide guidance and technical advice toward that goal; to evaluate both the direct and indirect effects of various pest control operations on both plants and animals; to stimulate new research and encourage current research now in progress to get the necessary information for sound guiding principles; and to foster cooperation among the various agencies and institutions with a legitimate concern in the areas of pest control and wildlife conservation.

Effects Minimized

In the past, persons responsible for pest-control programs have tended to minimize the harmful effects of chemicals used for this purpose on animal life. In some instances, conservationists have exaggerated the damage to wildlife and ignored the benefits they have contributed to both farmer and consumer.

Dr. Detlev W. Bronk, president of the National Academy of Sciences, expressed the hope that the Committee might achieve harmony and understanding between the two groups in "this increasingly important and somewhat controversial field of agriculture."

Coos Bay Man Files Damage Suit Here

Jerome C. Rotert, Coos Bay, is seeking $8,000 in general damages and $2,500 in special damages as a result of an accident involving John Gustafson and Dean and Taylor Pontiac company, both of Medford.

According to the complaint in the Jackson county circuit court, Rotert alleges he suffered permanent injuries in an accident while he was helping move household furniture on a pickup truck owned by Dean and Taylor and operated by Gustafson June 20, 1958.

Rotert said he was riding in the bed of the pickup truck to steady the furniture when the truck lurched forward causing the furniture to shift and throw him from the truck onto the street.

Medford Man Being Held in Jail Here

Jackson county sheriff's deputies returned James J. Roberts, 27, Medford, to Jackson county Tuesday on charges of uttering and publishing a false check.

Roberts was arrested by Polk county authorities last week. He is being held in the Jackson county jail in lieu of $1,500 bail.

Benjamin Herbert Erskins, 26, is being held for Orange county, California, authorities on charges of armed robbery in California, sheriff's deputies said. He was arrested Monday in Medford.

Erskins is being held in the Jackson county jail in lieu of $52,000 bail.
