Quotes From the News

Los Angeles—Mr. and Mrs. Paul Miller, former FBI undercover agents in the Communist Party, on their decision to build a bomb shelter in their front yard.

"Being Communists as long as we were and knowing the dangers as thoroughly as we do—both of us realize the United States is in peril today."

Havana—Premier Fidel Castro, hinting his government may confiscate all remaining American-owned business interests in Cuba:

"They are here now, but it may be that they will not be here."

Los Angeles—George W. Walker, Ford Motor Co. executive and director of styling, saying compact cars will become increasingly popular:

"It is a part of a general desire for compactness, which we see in men's Ivy League suits and women's emphasis on slimness and sleekness."

New York—American Nazi Party Commander George Lincoln Rockwell, saying he would return to New York, from which he was ousted after a near-riot over his plans to hold a July 4 rally:

"I'll be back. If the Commies can speak in Union Square, so can I."

Small Worlds Around Us

By Lynn M. Watkins

On the Beach— A Lonely Philosopher

The beach seemed entirely deserted except for myself. The sand was tinged with a faint pink glow from the reflected sunset, like the reddish hue of a rosette tern's wing.

A short distance to my left stood the walls of a sandcastle that some child had worked at fashioning throughout the long afternoon. Slowly the tide was creeping toward it; would soon crumble its walls and level it into sandy anonymity. Such, I thought, will eventually happen to everything man-made, sometime in the geologic future.

Since the people left, the noises attendant to their occupancy has gone, too; everything was silent, except the low gurgling whisper of the incoming tide.

Last Patrol

At the very edge of the water, a platoon of spotted sandpipers danced by on their last patrol. In the reflected light of the sky I saw a pelican moving homeward through the night.

Insects, whose beach-side existence I never suspected, began their medley of discords at my back. This phylum of life one does not associate with the beach; but here they were, each vying with the other for volume and repetition. Back there is the darkness the life of bugs was also going on. I could easily visualize the ants hurrying up and down the endless grass stems. Under them waited the antlion, hungry and ready to pounce.

Even the scorpion would be emerging from some dark crevice to begin his nightly search for other insects. I could picture him crawling silently through the darkness; a bloodthirsty killer on the hunt.

Up the swaying stem of the sea oats, a praying mantis will creep toward a gaudy monarch butterfly that will have taken refuge from the night.

Morning will reveal the tattered wings, and the dry husk of the body discarded on the sand. Here the wind will toy with it for a while, then whisk it away.

Sea Hunt

A loud splash in the dark water ahead of me exploded with the suddenness of a gunshot. My thoughts rushed back to the sea. Here, in a different medium, the age-old conflict was also being waged. A mackerel or a shark had slashed into a school of smaller fish and had eaten one or more of their numbers. Those who escaped were not free, for the hunt would continue, time and time again.

The tide now had reached the outer castle wall; I could feel the crumbling ruins trickling into the flatness of the beach. A small wavelet, its white top glowing with a faint luminescence, licked up the last rampart, and the little sand-castle was gone. The little wave that did the damage ran back into the sea, gurgling happily at its destructiveness.

I walked homeward along the sea's outer edge. Behind me my footprints were being erased one by one. I was leaving no evidence; no more track or mark than the bird makes in the air, or the fish makes in the water.

Man and the footprints he makes last but a little time. A puff of wind, a tiny wave, and they are gone. The small niche they occupied in time or space is taken by another who, in turn, will be followed by another – time without end – into the infinity of the great unknown.

Kerby Man Fined In Medford Court

A Kerby, Ore., man entered a plea of guilty in Medford municipal court yesterday to a charge of resisting arrest, and was fined $101 and given a 25 day jail sentence.

Sentenced was Annis Bird Dixon. He was arrested on the resisting arrest charge after he exchanged blows with a city police officer who had first tried to arrest him on a charge of being drunk in public.

Officer Gene Depuy said in his report that he observed Dixon sleeping in a car which was parked in the northbound lane on Biddle rd., between McAndrews rd. and Jackson st., about 3:45 a.m. The car was running and the lights were on, Depuy said.

When Depuy awoke Dixon, he found him to be under the influence of alcoholic beverages and arrested him for being drunk in public.

Dixon refused to be taken into custody, Depuy said and put up a fight. Several blows were exchanged before Depuy was finally able to handcuff Dixon to the patrol car and transport him to the city jail, according to the report.

Dixon was also fined $11 on the drunk in public charge.
