Overpopulation Could Erase Man's Standard of Living

Editor's note: The following article was written by a June graduate of the school of journalism at the University of Oregon as an "editorial summary" of the conclusions developed in the senior thesis required of each graduate. The opinions are those of the writer.

By DON PERDEW
(Portland, Ore.)

Every 24 hours the world's population increases by 135,000. Each year 50 million are added to the rapidly growing population. The phenomenal birth rate has boosted the world's total to 2.8 billion at the present time and predictions are that it could exceed 6 billion by the year 2000.

The reason for this increase is science's widening control over disease and death. As the mortality rate goes down, the population increases. And with this increase, there is a growing demand for food, land and other natural resources. The predictions of Malthus are once again being repeated. The dangers of overpopulation could erase all of man's striving for a better standard of living; misery and poverty would prevail.

Physical Limitations
It has been suggested that a world-wide increase in the output of food could support a growing population for many years. True, the earth could theoretically support a population of upwards of 100 billion persons on a low subsistence diet, but in practice there are certain physical limitations.

Presumably science can only go so far in stepping up yield-per-acre or in making possible the cultivation of what is now useless land. And in the meantime man's natural resources are diminishing at a phenomenal rate.

There is also the threat that countries that are undeveloped and that have a birth rate of almost 3 per cent will seek for new land and food either by conquering other nations or by allying themselves with a more powerful nation, notably Russia.

Adverse Effects Inevitable
The adverse effects of overpopulation are inevitable if something is not done to reduce the rate of population increase. Just as science has gained control over the death rate, it must gain control over the birth rate. And this means perfecting an inexpensive, simple method of birth control. Methods of contraception that are more effective are constantly being worked on in the laboratories. The oral contraceptive is thought to be the solution.

But still there is another problem to contend with, that of religious and social objection to the use of artificial means of contraception. The Roman Catholics and other religious groups strongly oppose any man-made interference with the "natural way of God." Whether their views can be swayed by the formidable pressures of population remains to be seen.

By what means can the underdeveloped countries solve their population explosion? Certainly the impoverished people are too poor to afford contraceptive devices and in many cases are too illiterate to understand methods of avoiding birth. The need is for government control of contraceptive clinics and the dissemination of birth control information. The cost of such a program would not be out of reach of most countries and the benefits would more than pay for any expenditures. Japan, by legalized abortions and sterilization, has reduced her birth rate considerably since 1947. Over one million abortions take place yearly.

Overpopulation Could Erase Man's Standard of Living

Should the United States take part in this birth control program? Will religious groups allow our government to spend money to set up these clinics in other countries? These questions are of current controversy and remain unanswered. The paralytic point, however, is that while we spend money in foreign aid to these countries, the population growth keeps increasing the need for still more aid. The result is that we must increase our foreign aid as the population increases. If we could curb this population increase, much could be saved.

The elimination of starvation and poverty can never be absolute. We can not completely control the birth rate nor can we obtain a constant increase in food production. But as the world's population grows the need for a solution becomes more and more inevitable. Either man utilizes the methods of contraceptives that science has provided for him, or the predictions of a population that will triple in 40 years will come true.

Permanente Denies Monopoly Charges

Washington-UPI-Permanente Cement Co., Oakland, Calif., today denied federal trade commission charges of violation of the anti-merger section of the Clayton anti-trust act.

A two-count monopoly complaint was filed against the firm and its subsidiary, Glacier Sand & Gravel Co., Seattle, and involves the company's purchase of three competing firms in the Pacific Northwest.

A spokesman for the Permanente firm asserted that the acquisitions did not lessen competition as charged by the FTC complaint, but actually increased it.

Portland Residents Routed by Flames

Portland-UPI-A two-alarm fire routed residents of the Western Rooms on southwest Second ave. just off lower Burnside Sunday evening.

One man, Edgar Alcorn, 67, suffered first and second degree burns.

Battalion Fire Chief J. H. Rippele said that if the blaze had occurred during hours when the tenants were asleep a major disaster might have resulted. The blaze was blamed on smoker's carelessness.

Early today, a three-alarm fire resulted in estimated $7,000 damage to the Mayfair Apartments in northwest Portland.

Portland-UPI-Dean Ellis, head of the Oregon State Tax commission, said here Saturday night that there should be "no competition tax-wise" between Oregon and Washington in the pursuit of new industries.
