UNIFORM TRAFFIC CITATION—Starting July 1 state, county and city law enforcement agencies will begin issuing a uniform citation to traffic violators in the state. A sample of the new kind of citation is illustrated above. The ticket is being adopted for both the convenience of the violator and the convenience of law enforcement agencies. It will permit a violator to know immediately why he was stopped and what the charge is, and it will provide the law enforcement agency with complete information on the nature and outcome of the charge. The ticket was developed by the state traffic safety division in cooperation with police agencies and courts throughout the state. It will be the only citation permitted to be used by all law enforcement agencies in the state. The large box midway on the ticket indicates violation in the first column and the other three columns permit the officer to indicate with a checkmark the technical aspects of the violation. Four copies of each ticket will be made, one each going to the violator, court, police department records and state department of motor vehicles in Salem.

Managua Offers Chance To Get Away From It All

Managua, Nicaragua – UPI – Managua is a wonderful place —particularly for the traveler who wants to get away from all those other American tourists.

This tropical city is one of the few left in the western world where the tourists don't seem to outnumber the natives. And the natives definitely are friendly.

Managua has 13 hotels. Rates run about $10 a day, European plan, at comfortable hotels that feature good restaurants and swimming pools.

Food is good at the better restaurants. And the U.S. visitor can either experiment with local dishes, like nacatamales, the Nicaraguan version of the Mexican tamale, or order up a back-home specialty like a big steak.

Beef Top Export

Beef, incidentally, is becoming one of this Latin nation's top exports.

Another big export is gold —and gold lines many shops in the capital in the form of handmade filigree jewelry at bargain prices.

The better hotels in Managua are centered around Lake Managua and the park near it. For those who want a horizon view, there are the volcanic mountains in the background.

From Lake Managua you can travel along the Rio Tipitapa—15 miles of fishermen's paradise, The Rio Tipitapa leads to Lake Nicaragua, the only fresh water lake in the world that harbors such salt marine life as shark, snook and saw-fish, along with tarpon and fresh water fish.

For those who prefer history to hooks, lines and sinkers, there Granada, a 30 mile drive from Managua on the shore of Lake Nicaragua. This oldest city in Nicaragua, founded in 1524, lies at the foot of the volcano Massaya.

Thriving Business

A Spanish colonial air pervades Granada, where horse-drawn carriages still do a thriving business. Setting the mood of the city is the 16th Century San Francisco Church. Because of the bright gardens, Granada is called the "City of Flowers."

Rivaling Granada in historical interest is Leon, 55 miles northwest of Managua. Pride of Leon is one of the largest churches in Latin America, the 18th Century Cathedral. Valuable jewels and revered religious relics are on display there, and the Cathedral holds the magnificent tomb of Ruben Dario, the first Latin American poet to influence the literature of Spain.

A note on what to wear: Nicaragua is a tropical country and light clothes are in order.

Salem – UPI – Monmouth to Corvallis bus service and a new charter car operation in the Dalles, Silverton and Mt. Angel areas will be available soon.

Research Aimed At Guiding Heart Patients' Activity

Washington (Science Service) – Electronic computing and measuring equipment is providing new guides to the amount of work a heart patient may safely perform, Dr. William G. Kudicek, director of research at the University of Minnesota Medical school's department of physical medicine and rehabilitation, said in an interview here.

The pioneer in medical electronics said, "the machines provide for the first time an easy-to-read recording of the complicated interrelationship of physiological functions as they relate to the heart. With them we can examine a heart patient in light exercise, for example, and see at almost a glance just when the danger point of exertion has been reached."

Useful Work Possible

Thanks to electronics, he said, it may be possible to return heart patients to useful work under accurately determined limits.

"With electronics aids, a heart patient can be thoroughly examined in a matter of hours, while, at the same time, measurements of the physiological responses that relate to the functioning of the heart are mechanically recorded and averaged."

A trained technician needs two to three days to average the same measurements.

The machine that provides the simultaneous computations is called an analog-to-digital converter. It assesses measurements of the patient's oxygen consumption, pulse rate, blood pressure, respiratory volume, energy output, and other responses as they are taken and records the results on a tape for quick, easy analysis.

Given First Use

The analog-to-digital converter is an innovation being used medically for the first time by Dr. Kudicek and his staff. Their research is sponsored by the Office of Vocational Rehabilitation of the National Institutes of Health.

The project is aimed at providing new guide lines for physicians to assess the working abilities of patients with heart disease. Dr. Kudicek was interviewed here before a meeting with Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (D.-Minn.) chairman of the Senate Subcommittee on Reorganization and International Organization, concerned with medical research and assistance and related studies.

One of the Senator's pet projects is medical electronics; he has been active in promoting this development as an aid both to medical research and practice.
